SUGAR STRIKE ENDS

THE strike of the sugar cooks is over. The decision to resume work was taken yesterday by eight cooks, representing the thirty-six unofficial strikers in the four sugar beet factories, following a consultation in Dublin with their union leaders.

British 'Plane Directors on Grave Charge

REFERENCE to a £1,250,000 contract for the production of 'planes was made at Bow street, London, yesterday, when the prosecution opened its case against three leading men in the aircraft industry, summoned under the Prevention of Corruption Act. The summonses charged the defendants with a conspiracy to commit, and with committing, offences against the Prevention of Corruption Act.

Before the Court were Harold Levers Armstrong, former general manager of Hawker Aircraft, Ltd., and Director-General of Aircraft Production at the British Ministry of Aircraft Production from July, 1942, until last February; Henry Bloss, Deputy Director of Aircraft Production at the Ministry of Aircraft Production, and Rex Hoyes, managing director of Cunliffe-Owen Aircraft, Ltd.

Bloss, when seen by the police, it is stated, buried his head in his hands, and said: "I see. I have been trapped. What a fool I am. I thought I was wide, but I am just a fool. I can see through it all now. I will help you all I can."

Armstrong said, in a statement, that income tax caused his financial difficulties, and during the greater part of 1942 he was borrowing considerable sums from relatives and friends.

On March 9 Superintendent Burt told Hoyes that he had examined his banking account, and found three credits corresponding to amounts paid to Armstrong and Bloss. "Hoyes was very excited," said Mr. L. A. Byrne, for the Director of Public Prosecutions. "Among other things he threatened to see the Prime Minister, and said that he would raise the matter in the House of Lords."

Messrs. Cunliffe Owen were given a contract by the Ministry of Aircraft Production for the manufacture of wings for a certain aircraft, at an estimated value of £1,250,000, together with an allocation of £56,000 to meet extension of premises.

Roosevelt Deplores Anti-Semitism

President Roosevelt, speaking yesterday on the suppression of Jewish newspapers by Argentina, said:—

"While this matter is, of course, one which concerns primarily the Argentina Government and people, I cannot forbear to give expression to my own feelings of apprehension at the taking in this hemisphere of action obviously anti-Semitic in nature and of a character so closely identified with the most repugnant features of Nazi doctrine.

"I believe this feeling is shared by the people of the United States and by the people of the other American Republics."

The President took the unusual course of authorising direct quotation of his remarks.

A message received late last night from Buenos Aires stated that the ban on Jewish newspapers had now been cancelled.—(Reuter.)

WORK TO BE RESUMED INSTANTLY

Work will begin immediately, the cooks having decided that all should resume, pending the immediate consideration of their claims before the Joint Industrial Council—the course which the Irish Sugar Company had urged from the beginning.

The strike, which began at the Mallow factory a week ago, and quickly spread to Thurles, Tuam and Carlow, threatened Eire's entire sugar supply.

The results of the cooks' strike action on the public and on their fellow-workers in other industries are incalculable at the moment. While they were sitting in conference yesterday, a Dublin sweet factory, employing hundreds of workers, closed for a week for want of sugar; jam manufacturers cut supplies to retailers, and many shops ran out of sweets. The biggest blow of all was that the Government gave no indication that it would restore the sugar ration to 2lb.

GREAT ACTIVITY

The settlement followed a day of feverish activity on the part of the Sugar Company, the men's union, Mr. P. J. Hallidien, T.D., North Cork, and the eight cooks, who were summoned hurriedly to Dublin. Early yesterday the cooks met at the head office of the Irish Engineering Industrial Union in Gardiner's Row, and, in agreement with Mr. John O'Brien, General Secretary of the union, they decided to resume.

Mr. P. J. Hallidien played a big part in the tentative settlement. He had a long interview with the cooks both in Mallow and Dublin, stressing the great loss to the nation, the farmers, workers, and the general community that would ensue from a protracted struggle.

Following an exchange of views between the Sugar Company and the Irish Engineering Industrial Union, the General Secretary of the union intimated in writing to the Secretary of the company, Mr. T. O'Hanrahan, that the cooks would resume work at once and put forward any claims they might have through the Joint Industrial Council, presided over by Judge Shannon, or through their union, for consideration by the company.

LESS JAM

The factories were notified last night to get the machinery going for instant work. Everything possible is being done by the company, an Irish Times reporter was informed, to expedite the delivery of beet and the production of sugar.

Clarnico-Murray's sweet factory, employing some hundreds of workers, at Harold's Cross, Dublin, has been closed for a week for want of sugar.

Housewives will get something less than half a pound of jam per week, instead of three-quarters, following the 50 per cent. cut in the sugar allocation to manufacturers. The strike came at a time when jam and sweet stocks were low, and shops had little reserves.

Major Dominick Doyle has retired from the Army as from yesterday.

Fines of £1,000 in Belfast Revenue Case

FINES of £1,000 each were imposed at Belfast Summons Court yesterday on Thomas Uniacke and his wife, Bridget Uniacke, of Shore road, Belfast, on a charge of knowingly harbouring 3,145 lb. of uncustomed tobacco. Thomas Uniacke was fined £5 on a further charge of harbouring 24 lb. of tobacco.

For the prosecution, Mr. B. J. Fox said that Uniacke was employed by a tobacco firm, Nicobrand, Ltd., owned by Mr. Stewart, who had the utmost confidence in him. Defendants were both natives of Eire, and the tobacco factory had originally been in Eire and had been transferred to Northern Ireland.

Police had found this tobacco on Uniacke's premises, where they also found Eire post office savings books. One, in the name of Thomas Uniacke, showed deposits of £1,500, and the other, in the name of Bridget Uniacke, showed deposits of £1,900. There was also a receipt showing the purchase by Mrs. Uniacke of a public-house in Eire for £650. The case was overwhelming against the defendants of having sold tobacco from time to time, so that the Revenue was defrauded of substantial sums.

The defendants admitted having sold small quantities, and on their behalf there was a plea for leniency.

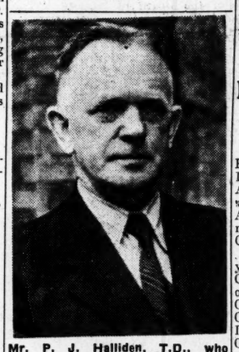

Thomas Uniacke was also fined £45 8s. 3d. for having clothing and boots, Army property, in his possession.

Illegal Curers May Face Court

Some of those who are believed to have cured bacon illegally may soon find themselves facing the Special Criminal Court. Having seized large quantities of unbranded bacon in Dublin hotels during the past week, officials of the Pigs and Bacon Commission are now on the track of those who cured it. In addition to being a civil offence, illegal curing is a violation of an Emergency Powers Order, and thus it is within the Attorney-General's power to place offenders before the Special Criminal Court. Whether he will do so or not, however, is impossible to say at this stage.

Yesterday an Irish Times reporter learned that pork had been cured in lavatories and in bathrooms. Raiding officials have found illegally cured bacon hidden beneath dirty wrappers.

Illegal curing is not confined to any one county. It has been discovered throughout the country, from Donegal to Cork. Tracking curers down is a tortuous task, but officials of the Commission are confident at present that they have a clue to the offenders.

Approval of the Government's action in creating an open market for pigs was expressed at a meeting of the National Executive of the Irish livestock trade, held at 5 Upper O'Connell street, Dublin. Mr. M. Bowe, Chairman, Irish Pig Dealers' Association, said that while the new order would, undoubtedly, have a very beneficial effect the pig trade had deteriorated so much that it would take some considerable time to retrieve the position.

Letters were read from the Department of Agriculture refusing the Executive's request for higher prices for stall-fed cattle, and from the Great Southern Railways Company refusing to reduce the price of traders' tickets. It was decided to take up with the Irish and English Traffic Conference the question of having the basis of charging fat stock rates altered.

Army Shooting Competitions

Crack-shots of Eire's Army Infantry Battalions will compete at the Curragh on Tuesday next for the Cup of the Minister for Defence; also for cash prizes, and for the honour of becoming members of the Infantry Corps shooting team.

The competition is open to Infantry teams whose members have qualified as marksmen in this year's range practices. Individual and team competitions will run concurrently, and will embrace both rifle and light automatic units. In the rifle contests, teams of one officer, two N.C.O.'s and three men, will fire a five-phase competition.

Each light automatic team will consist of one corporal and one man.

Colonel S. Magoran, Chief Staff Officer, Training Branch, will be in charge of the arrangements. The Minister for Defence, Mr. Oscar Traynor, will attend the competitions and present the prizes.

Farmer's Death After Stabbing

Shortly after he had been stabbed in a scuffle between farmers attending Newmarket (Co. Cork) horse fair on Thursday, John Lane (48), unmarried farmer, of Ballydesmond, died in Kanturk District Hospital. The stabbing took place at about 3.45 in the afternoon, Lane succumbing to a chest wound at 5 p.m. It is understood that a man from the same locality has been arrested in connection with the affair.

Matthew Jones, also of Ballydesmond, who was injured in the scuffle, is detained in Kanturk Hospital.

Germans Facing Encirclement

THE Red Army's Dnieper offensive is developing into a tremendous three-fold operation, threatening to split the German Armies and trap great parts of them, Reuter's reports. On three vital sectors the Germans face the danger of encirclement. They are:—

Kiev, where Russian Armies are striving to press round the city from bridgeheads north and south; in the Dnieper bend between Kremenchug and Zaporozhe, and between Zaporozhe and the Black Sea.

Immediately after the capture of Zaporozhe, General Malinovsky's troops stormed across the Dnieper in close pursuit of the retreating Germans. A drive down the river's west bank from this new bridgehead towards Kherson, near the river's mouth, would confront the Germans with the alternative of getting out of the region south of the Dnieper, including the Crimea, as quickly as possible, or risking a trap on the Stalingrad scale.

Soviet howitzers booming across the narrow Kerch Straits are a grim reminder that a direct Soviet land, sea and air onslaught on the Crimea may start at any time.

The battle for Melitopol will rank with the fiercest of the war. Street-fighting has been going on inside it for the past two days. Red Army men are filtering through the German lines from house to house and fighting their way over the roofs. Russian artillery is being hauled up to batter the street defences.

Further north German forces in the Dnieper bend face a pincer threat from Soviet thrusts south-east from the Kremenchug bridgehead and from Malinovsky's forces massing west of Zaporozhe.

Fighting of exceptional bitterness is going on round Kiev. General Rokossovsky's forces, their original bridgeheads far behind them, are attacking the outer belts of the city's defences. Besides infantry and tanks, 'swift-moving cavalry, whose practised co-operation with tanks has been most successful throughout this year's campaign, are also being used.

The great battle for Kiev is again the centre of attention. Here the Germans are fighting with some of their old energy, and the German Command is throwing in men in large numbers, regardless of cost.

Strong Russian attacks on the Leningrad front and reconnaissance in force north of Lake Ilmen were also reported from Berlin.

The Soviet communiqué stated that a further advance was made yesterday south of Zaporozhe and that positions were improved in the other battle sectors; that all counter-attacks had been repelled, with heavy losses to the enemy, 113 tanks disabled and 93 'planes shot down.

Reich Protest Addressed to Portugal

The Reich Government yesterday, through its Minister in Lisbon, protested sharply in a formal Note to the Portuguese Government against her yielding military bases on the Azores, under British pressure, and thus committing a serious breach of neutrality, according to German radio, quoted by Reuter.

"The Reich Government reserves the right to take the measures arising from the changed situation," the message added.

"The Japanese Government has also filed a protest, through its Minister in Lisbon, against the occupation of the Azores by British and American troops," it was stated.

New Chief of Staff in S. E. Asia

Lieutenant-General Sir Henry Pownall is to be Chief of Staff to Lord Louis Mountbatten, Supreme Allied Commander, S.E. Asia, it was announced last night. He is 55. An American, Major-General Wedemeyer, has been appointed Deputy Chief of Staff.

Sir Henry, who was in March this year appointed Commander-in-Chief, Persia-Iraq, has been Chief of Staff in the South-West Pacific, Commander-in-Chief, Far East; Vice-Chief of the Imperial General Staff, Inspector-General of the Home Guard and Chief of General Staff with the B.E.F.

Major-General Wedemeyer (47), a graduate of West Point, the American Military Academy, was appointed to the General Staff Corps two years ago. He is described in American circles as a brilliant soldier.

Women Law Clerks Organise

The spurt of organisation is moving Dublin women law clerks and typists. They made up a large part of a meeting held on Thursday under the auspices of the Irish Union of Distributive Workers and Clerks, which was addressed by Messrs. J. W. Kelly, P.C., district organiser, and W. J. Fitzpatrick, branch secretary.

Conditions of employment and the advantages of organisation were dealt with by the speakers.

Japanese Bases Bombed

Allied 'planes, in a heavy raid on Japanese bases, dropped 30 tons of bombs at Madang and 42 tons at Cape Gloucester, according to an official report from General MacArthur's Headquarters. Two Japanese fighters were shot down.

Patrol boats sank two small coastal vessels and several barges off the coast of New Britain.

The Japanese have thrown 10,000 men into their triple drive in Western Yunnan province, at the eastern end of the Burma Road. A Chinese communiqué reports intensified fighting. The Japanese have captured two more small towns.

A communiqué from General Stilwell's headquarters says that a Japanese 250 feet merchantman was bombed and sunk off the China coast.—(Reuter.)

Women Must Demand Price Control

The present system of rationing, control of prices, rates of relief, and the apathy of most women in Eire concerning these problems, were dealt with by Mr. J. Larkin (jun.), T.D., at a public meeting last night, held by the Dublin Labour Women's Committee, at the Irish Women Workers' Hall, Fleet street. The meeting called for an increase of 50 per cent. in relief rates to meet the increased cost of living.

There will be no efficient rationing or price control until we get some effective demand from women, he said. It was in the hands of the parents to obtain hot meals in every school.

Essential foodstuffs should be subsidised by the Government to enable the poor to buy their fair share of them.

Reviewing the work of the Committee, Mrs. J. Ireland urged women to come out and back the anti-tuberculosis campaign. To combat malnutrition among the children the Government should be opening up kitchens to feed them.

Comparing prices of woollen garments in Eire and Northern Ireland, Mrs. Ireland said that if these could be produced at a low price in Northern Ireland they should be produced at a lower figure in Eire.

Argentine Cabinet Re-organised

An A.P. message from Monte Video states that Ramirez has reorganised the Argentine Cabinet with the inclusion of Gustavo Martinez Zuvia and Cesary Ameghino, a lawyer whose political career has been closely linked with that of Manuel Fresco, one of the foremost exponents of nationalism in the Argentine.

Compulsory Production of Wheat

—DR. RYAN.

DR. RYAN, Minister for Agriculture, in a broadcast from Radio Eireann last night, called upon farmers to grow more wheat.

It was not possible, he explained, to reach a decision as to the food production programme for 1944 until some estimate could be made of the extent to which the yields from this season's harvest would be likely to meet requirements. According to the figures now available the area under wheat left the position in regard to bread supplies precarious. The amount grown last year fell to 509,000 acres, as against 574,000 the previous year.

Farmers, on the whole, had responded well to the nation's needs. Many had done more than their share. If all tilled the quota there would be no need to worry. Some farmers were reluctant to begin and others to continue growing wheat. If compelled to till they gave preference to other crops. Any deficiency in home-grown wheat could be made good only by imports, and it could not be too strongly emphasised that there was a definite limit to the shipping that could be made available. In any event it was bad policy to utilise for the transport of wheat, which could be grown at home, shipping space which was so vitally needed for other commodities.

The only sensible way of solving the problem was to arrange for the production at home of the total needs, and that meant at least 700,000 acres must be placed under wheat. He could not advise the Government to rely on the price inducement now offered to ensure that all needs would be met, and so the new Tillage Order would make it compulsory on every farmer to devote a certain portion of his arable land to the production of wheat.

All farmers in Leinster and Munster (excluding Longford, Clare, Kerry and West Cork) would be required to sow at least one-tenth of their arable land with wheat. In the Counties of Longford, Clare, Kerry, West Cork, Roscommon and East Galway one-sixteenth of the arable land must be sown with wheat. In the other counties—Cavan, Donegal, Monaghan, Leitrim, Mayo, Sligo and Connemara—the minimum area of arable land for wheat will be one-twenty-fifth.

These provisions, said the Minister, may be considered drastic, and they may cause some hardships; but the Government would be failing in their obligations to the community if they neglected to adopt whatever measures they consider necessary for the welfare of the people.

NEW PRICE

As a means of encouraging greater voluntary effort, the Government had decided to guarantee 55s. per barrel for the highest grade wheat of the 1944 crop, as compared with 50s. per barrel this season. In addition, the scheme of fertiliser credit dockets would be continued, which, in effect, means a price of 57s. 6d. a barrel. The price of barley would be the same as last year—i.e., 35s. a barrel. Regulations applying to the marketing and price of oats of the 1944 harvest would be announced later.

The Minister said that he knew the farmers' difficulties, but he must not allow these things to defeat him. Every man in the country who had the means of producing food should do so to the maximum of his ability. He had stressed the necessity of immediate action in the case of wheat, later the necessity of a larger acreage of potatoes, and at least as much sugar-beet as this year would be discussed.

The war may go on for a long time, and, though they hoped they would be spared from its worst hardships, they would be tempting Providence if they did not make sure to produce enough food from their own resources.

Dr. Ryan, Minister for Agriculture, who spoke last night on the necessity for the growing of more wheat.

FIFTH ARMY ADVANCING NORTH OF VOLTURNO

FIFTH Army tank columns were reported by Reuter last night to be thrusting forward from the Allied strip north of the Volturno in face of fire from big German guns mounted on the heights eight miles away. Marshal Kesselring's 80,000 Germans all along the front are being pushed back.

At some points General Clark's troops are more than five miles north of the Volturno.

From Stanley Burch, Reuter's Correspondent at Allied H.Q.

From emplacements on 3,000 feet high mountains, Marshal Kesselring's artillery is sweeping the rain-sodden plain with fire. Under cover of these guns Panzer formations are making repeated counter-attacks in fierce bids to stem the Allied advance, and the great battle of the plain grows fiercer every hour.

The struggle is toughest on the coastal sector—where British troops effected a new landing—and north of Capua. But north-east of Capua Allied troops—backed by their mobile tank-buster guns — have already prised the Germans from heights menacing the Capua bridgehead.

As the battle rages north of the bridgehead strip, now from two to five miles deep, a steady stream of heavy tanks and guns pours over the bridges swung across the Volturno.

On the Fifth Army flank, where both Allied armies are threatening Vinchiaturo road junction, a new advance has been made by the Eighth Army. They captured Casacalenda, Sataelia, Monacilioni and Toro.

NAVAL SUPPORT

British troops, supported by tanks, made their successful landing just north of the Volturno estuary in brilliant moonlight at the same moment as the Fifth Army struck across the river at Capua. They were supported with gunfire from the British destroyers Laforey and Lookout, and the Dutch gunboat Flores. They at once dug themselves in along a line just south of the canal, three miles north of the estuary, and subsequently joined up with the main Fifth Army.

The original crossing of the Volturno took place in clear skies, but, as the Allied troops started to consolidate the bridgehead, heavy rain started, and persistently wet weather has continued ever since.

The Rome road north of Capua is for some miles in the form of a causeway, and progress is possible only on its western side, as the east side is dominated by the Germans' mountain guns to the north.

This western portion, a highly cultivated plain, has now been reduced to a partial morass, with countless canals increasing the difficulties for armoured vehicles.

In their repeated counter-attacks the Germans are backing up their tanks with half-track mobile guns, switched from one threatened point to another. West of Capua the Volturno is now 300 feet wide, but east of the town the passage is easier. At some places the river is only four feet deep, enabling troops to wade through chest-deep—rifles and ammunition carried above their heads.

While resistance is fiercest in the western sectors, farther to the east the Germans are putting up stiff opposition near the town of Caiazzo, ten miles north-east of Capua; but Allied troops are already astride the lateral road running through the town.

JUNCTION HIT

In an attempt to prevent the transport of German reinforcements and supplies to meet the Fifth Army's advance, Flying Fortresses attacked Terni, 46 miles east of Rome, a junction of the rail system running down Italy's backbone. Part of the marshalling yards was left in flames. Liberators and Flying Fortresses, flying through heavy clouds, attacked the east coast railway system.

Cairo Radio said last night: "The Fifth Army has virtually won the battle of the Volturno." Another Reuter report said:—

British and American troops are battling their way up the craggy heights, from where the Germans have been shelling the Allied positions beyond Capua and further east. With hand grenades and tommy-guns the Allied troops are prising the Germans out of their carefully prepared gun positions. German gunners are being driven back crag by crag at the point of the bayonet.

The German News Agency stated last night:—On the Volturno front the centre of the Allied offensive was north-east of Capua, and German formations retreated in order to heights north and north-east of Capua. American tank forces and strong Canadian formations carried out an envelopping attack on Campobasso, trying to encircle and annihilate the German forces in this area. Several hours of bitter street fighting in the outskirts and town followed, the Agency added, and Campobasso was finally evacuated yesterday evening.

Americans Lose 593 Airmen

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT stated yesterday in Washington that the Allies could not afford to lose 6½ 'planes daily as in the Schweinfurt raid. The loss of American 'planes over Germany was serious, but he pointed out that the daily average was much less.

On the credit side, he said, the raid put out of commission a large factory, thereby impeding the German war effort.

General H. H. Arnold, Chief of the United States Army Air Forces, said that 593 American airmen were lost in the 60 Flying Fortresses shot down over Schweinfurt. "On the basis of past experience, at least half of these were believed to be alive as prisoners of war. The more important the target, the more fiercely the Germans fight to protect it," he said.

He added:—"The success of the Schweinfurt attack will have a definite effect on German war economy within a reasonably short period of time—in some important phases within a month—and will result in the shortening of the war."

He ranked the attack on the ball-bearing plants in importance with the raid on the Ploesti oilfields. 485 tons of high-explosives and 88 tons of incendiaries were dropped on the target, with "excellent results."—(Reuter and Associated Press.)

GERMAN CLAIM

The German News Agency claimed last night that at least 150 American 'planes were shot down during the Schweinfurt raid. Martin Hallensleben, German News Agency correspondent, said: "The Flying Fortresses were turned into flying coffins, and the German defences shot down almost half of the 300 bombers in only an hour and a half."

RAID ON FRANCE

A British Air Ministry communiqué last night stated that two German aircraft were intercepted and destroyed off the south-west coast of England yesterday afternoon.

Typhoon fighters later destroyed an F.W. 190 in the Brest area.

Typhoon bombers yesterday raided a transformer station near Tingry, in Northern France. They descended to 50 feet to drop their bombs.

Three German aircraft were destroyed in raids over England last night. Raiders flew over an East Anglian coast town and turned out to sea after meeting A.A. gunfire. No bombs were dropped.

Another Blow for Manufacturers

Irish manufacturers are depressed by the announcement made this week by Mr. Lemass, that all trans-Atlantic shipping space on Irish ships will be reserved for food. Though the supply of commodities from America had been dwindling, through the gradual conversion of industry in that continent to war purposes, we had been receiving small, but useful, quantities of cotton yarns, cotton piece goods, paper, paper pulp, tobacco leaf, raw sugar, footwear, handbags, materials for paint and polish, chemicals and drugs, and small quantities of metal goods made from substances not extensively required for war industries. Among the industries which may now feel the pinch of war more acutely are the hosiery, weaving, shirt-making, cigarette-making, and paper industries.

Man's Life Saved by Resuscitation

A new type of automatic resuscitator, used by the Dublin Fire Brigade, yesterday saved the life of Sydney Large (63), Mornington road, Ranelagh, who was treated after he had been taken from the River Liffey at noon. It was stated that, if the apparatus had not been available, the man's life could not have been saved.

An interested audience of doctors at Sir Patrick Dun's Hospital, where Large was taken, viewed a demonstration of the apparatus by Fire Brigade officials.

The resuscitator used was the "Novox Lung-Governed" type, which is also used in cases of gassing and electrocution. The only one of its kind in Dublin, it has been in the possession of the Fire Department since last May, and has been in successful service on six occasions.

Consisting of two cylinders of "dicarbox" gas (93 per cent. oxygen and 7 per cent. carbon dioxide) whose flow is automatically controlled by the patient's natural breathing, the apparatus is neat and portable. The rubber facepiece is fitted with inhalation and exhalation valves, and a special rubber valve in the body of the governor makes the patient's breathing visible. The apparatus is used in conjunction with the standard form of Schafer manipulative resuscitation, and it is recommended that treatment should be continued for at least eight hours or until life is pronounced extinct by a doctor. Its greatest advantage is that, even when breathing has ceased, a sudden "jerk" of the undiluted gas can be given, which frequently awakens lung action immediately.

Derry Constable Fired On

A young police constable on duty in Derry was fired on in the early hours of yesterday morning. Seeing a cyclist with his machine improperly lighted, he called on him to halt. The man did so. A revolver shot was then fired at the constable, who threw himself on the ground, escaping injury. The cyclist immediately rode off. Despite intense police activity, which included a search of houses in various parts of the city, he has not yet been discovered.

"PEACE COMES DROPPING SLOW"

Peace... the quiet peace of the countryside... the peace of the contented mind. These may we strive for, and with wise striving we shall surely attain them.

Life Assurance can also set the mind at rest by safeguarding the future. Yet many people still do not realise its varied applications. To deny ourselves its benefits is to jeopardise our share of happiness.

Solving the Hospital Problem

A ROUND TABLE conference between the Hospitals' Commission and representatives of the hospitals was urged by Dr. T. J. D. Lane in his inaugural address on "Notes on the Hospital Problem," at the opening meeting of the Clinical Session of the Meath Hospital and County Dublin Infirmary yesterday afternoon.

Before meeting the Hospitals' Commission, he said, the hospitals themselves should consider such matters as limitation of architectural reconstruction, solution of the bed problem, co-ordination of effort (professional and managerial), and complete review of the nursing services.

The main defects in our hospital system, he stated, were: (1) The shortage of beds; (2) the under-payment and overworking of nurses, and (3) the inadequacy of sums budgeted for auxiliary services (anæsthetic, bio-chemistry, pathology and radiology). Putting these things right should be the policy of the day, even if and though the price meant serious limitation of architectural reconstruction.

"If we have to choose now, as I think we have, between new buildings, on the one hand, and proper staffing on the other, I would unhesitatingly vote for proper staffing.

"The hospital buildings in Dublin are, on the whole, reasonably good and serve their purpose quite well. The condition of the nursing service is deplorable, and the auxiliary services are, in many instances, semi-starved. Before money is spent on building, these two wrongs should be put right.

"I believe," said Dr. Lane, "if the suggestion already offered were adopted and energetically put into practice the shortage of beds would be non-existent in little more than a year's time. The money is there; all that is wanted is understanding, co-operation and goodwill—especially goodwill."

The lecturer said that three things stood out in his mind, looking back over the past twenty years or so. The first was the amazing progress in treatment, especially in the use of anæsthesia, biochemistry, radiology, etc. The second, and most important, was the development in the practice of Irish surgery, especially in the marked expansion of specialised practice—an expansion which had given Irish surgery a far better chance of competing for international honours. The third matter was the "sweepstakes"—the most important and significant financial enterprise affecting the voluntary hospitals.

It would be unfair to criticise the Government for their handling of sweepstakes money, unless they of the voluntary hospitals were to apportion to themselves part of the blame for the present situation. The situation, however, was that the funds had ceased to increase, with costs rising in all directions, with the scheme for four hospitals for Dublin frozen for years to come, and with the bed shortage. The time had come for a complete review of the whole position.

Senator T. C. Kingamill Moore, K.C., who presided, said that they were living in a fool's paradise if they thought, with income tax at its present level, that the voluntary hospitals could be maintained in a flourishing condition by voluntary subscriptions. The State must step in and meet the difference between voluntary income and expenses.

BOOKS OF THE WEEK

Recent Fiction

The Stones Begin to Dance. By Aben Kandel. Michael Joseph. 7/6 net.

THE man of good-will has become a familiar character in the modern American novel. The cynicism of the 'twenties, which made "Babbit" a best seller, has given way to a renascence of faith in human nature and enjoyment of life. The difficulties of this philosophy from the point of view of the serious novelist are obvious. A reading public which has been accustomed to sneer at the ordinary man will be quick to label as "sentimental" any whole-hearted sympathy for humanity which shows the slightest breach of taste. In this respect, William Saroyan has exercised an important influence; for his exuberant vitality, combined with a sure artistic sense, has enabled him to sail with few disasters over the dangerous rocks of sentimentality. And, where Saroyan has successfully led, others, who may not possess his extraordinary qualities, can follow with some assurance of a sympathetic hearing.

Mr. Aben Kandel is one of the "others." "The Stones Begin to Dance" is quieter in tone than any of Saroyan's works, but very similar in mood. The novel describes the world of a New York market place peopled by refugees from Europe, as well as native Americans. The central character Mr. Marco is a self-educated philosopher, who gives advice and help to all his neighbours in their financial and other difficulties. The novel is episodic, with a thread of plot winding through it, the story of an adolescent love affair which is remarkably well handled. When Mr. Kandel deals simply with an incident in the lives of his characters he shows fine observation and restraint. But his novel would have profited artistically had he refrained from commenting and philosophising on these incidents; for his comments have a pretentious quality, both in style and in content, which jars with the simplicity of his characters and of his approach to the characters. The comments apart—and, indeed, they are not frequent—this is a most promising novel.

Alvina Foster. By Josephine Bell. London: Longmans. 8/6 net.

Against a background of real tragedy, the author has painted a moving picture of life among the poor of London. The tale concerns a family living between Deptford and Greenwich. Their lives are always hard, sometimes sordid, and shipwreck through crime or misfortune is never very far distant. Yet they are the same as others—often, perhaps, more genuine—and capable of sacrifice and love.

Alvina Foster is the second girl in this family; her mother is dead through hardship and the strain of child-bearing. Almost the whole duty of caring for the family devolves upon the eldest, Nellie, who for a time gives up her life to this duty. Alvina soon becomes a heavy charge upon the family; she develops chronic rheumatism, and is a cripple for the rest of her existence. Misfortune refines and strengthens her character, and the end of the book is fine and sorrowful.

Thorofare. By Christopher Morley. Faber and Faber. 8/6 net.

Mr. Christopher Morley set for himself a high standard when he wrote "Thunder on the Left," a standard which he has not again reached. In this new novel he tells the story of an English boy who goes to the United States and of his gradual "Americanising." Mr. Morley has shown before that he has insight into the mind of a child, and his descriptions of a boy's feelings when suddenly transplanted to a new country are often acute. But the novel is long and diffuse, with no plot to hold it together. The main character of the boy is the only one of interest, and that curious penetration of the reactions of people to one another which characterised "Thunder on the Left" is entirely lacking. In "Thorofare" Mr. Morley has become more kindly to his characters, but less interesting as a novelist.

The First Born. By Paul Trent. Ward Lock. 8/6 net.

It is very hard to find anything to recommend in this novel; the plot is fantastic and the treatment completely inadequate. Mr. Trent is obviously not at home among "county" families; his one idea is that they should consume vast quantities of whiskey and soda, which they do with monotonous regularity on practically every page. The style is clumsy and tortured—indeed, it is surprising that an author with so many books to his name has not acquired more ease in writing. This book may do well in the cheaper libraries.

City of the Soul. By Michael Home. Methuen. 8/6 net.

This novel, though complete in itself, terminates the trilogy begun by "The Place of Little Birds," and continued by "The House of Shade." In it the British Intelligence Agent Brice carries out an important secret mission to Tunisia, the main object of which was the winning over of its Bey to the Allied cause. An exciting and engrossing tale in which some of the characters are real enough, and all the places are still fresh in the minds of those who took an interest in the North African campaign.

Prelude to Peace

Planning for Freedom: Swarthmore Lecture, 1943. By Leyton Richards. Geo. Allen & Unwin. 2/6 net.

PLANNING for freedom, as the Swarthmore lecture for 1943 convinces one, may be even as difficult as making war. It is that subject that Mr. Leyton Richards chose for his discourse when addressing the Society of Friends at their London meeting in August last. In the comprehensive survey that he presented of all the aspects of national and personal freedom of international relations, he showed a clear conception of the difficulties that the present condition of world strife have brought about. To face the task of making a settlement with any promise of permanence, statesmen would require to extend their vision beyond the sphere of purely mundane things.

Showing a keen appreciation of the illusions and shortcomings that vitiated the schemes to bring about a world peace after the first World War, he argues for a Federal Union of States, whose sovereignty would be upheld under a common central government. In such a plan he foresees the realisation of the Christian ideal.

Country Life

Norfolk Life. By Lilias Rider Haggard and Henry Williamson. Faber and Faber. 8/6 net.

A delightful mingling of observations and memories from one of the least spoiled parts of East Anglia—a land famous for its malting barley—a tract of Old England, where buskins were worn on market and fair days, and where flint cottages let for rents of one and sixpence a week. For some years Miss Lilias Haggard contributed a weekly article to the local paper, of her everyday actions, observations and thoughts. To Mr. Williamson has fallen the task of clarifying and arranging the various entries for presentation in book form. The result is an attractive and entertaining collection of interesting observations and incidents concerning the country-side.

Chapters from an Autobiography

By Seumas O'Sullivan

IN about the year 1901 my father, for some reason which I cannot now remember, had become interested in the subject of vegetarianism, and I, who would have followed him anywhere, adopted a vegetarian diet. At that time there was in College Green a famous and well-conducted vegetarian restaurant, and there we used to see and admire "from afar off" the bearded and spectacled features of A.E., and, with him, Harry Norman, Paul Gregan (whose little volume of poems, "Sunset Town," was one of the earliest books to be published by Standish O'Grady in his "Library of the Nore" at Kilkenny), and others of that small, but distinguished, group of workers and writers connected with the Irish Agricultural Organisation and its journal, The Irish Homestead. On a certain day—a memorable day for me—I met there an old schoolfellow, a Dublin "business" man, who asked me if I knew Tom Keohler. "No," said I. "You ought to know him," said he, "for he is just as mad as you are." By which he meant that Tom Keohler was as much interested in music and art and literature as I was myself. Swiftly on that chance meeting followed my introduction to "T.G.K.," and from that time my direction was fixed. Almost the first question which Keohler addressed to me was: "Do you know A.E.?" I had, as a matter of fact, purchased quite recently, at Hickey's bookshop, a copy of his first book of poems, "Homeward: Songs by the Way," and those exquisitely fashioned lyrics had made an almost instant appeal, but the particular form of mysticism with which they were saturated was as yet a "closed book." Some weeks later "T.G.K." asked me if I would like to meet A.E., and I sprang at the opportunity. At that time, A.E. held a weekly meeting at which those friends of his who were interested in the teaching of the Easterns, and in the relation of world mythologies to that of Ireland, used to congregate. The little house to which my new friend brought me was close to that other little house in Mount Pleasant avenue to which my father had brought me, many years earlier, to meet the old poet of The Nation, Thomas Caulfield Irwin. That evening was certainly one of the most memorable in my life. The room in which we met was hung with pictures painted, for the most part, by A.E., and these paintings filled me with wonder and delight. They were mainly impressions of his visions into another world, as yet strange to me, but later to become more familiar to me as I learned to know the painter, and to gain a little of that knowledge which he was so eager to impart. From that time on, I was a constant visitor at those gatherings in Mount Pleasant avenue, and to the conversation of A.E. and of the other members of the group I owe whatever is worth preserving in my writing. But, at that early day, and amongst the many fine writers and talkers with whom I came in contact, "T.G.K." stands out in my thought. He was at that time living in Sandymount, I in Rathmines; and many an evening did I make the journey to his house, and to the little study upstairs in which we talked and smoked amidst his books until a late hour. Even then our converse had not ended, for it was his hospitable custom to see me some way on my walk home. Often, when we had approached the later stage of my journey I would, on my part, offer to see him part of the way on his, and there is at the corner of the Appian Way a wall at which we used to finally part company, and on which, we made, on one occasion, a pencilled note in commemoration of some particular event. The rains have long since washed out that inscription, but I can still see "T. G. K." as he turned homeward, his hand uplifted in the old Celtic manner of salute, a manner which had, I think, been introduced by A.E., and by which, even now, I can recognise one of his followers.

In an eloquent tribute to his memory, H. F. Norman has, I think, emphasised those qualities in him which were more than anything he has left in his printed works. His depth, his friendship, his understanding can never be entirely expressed. Yeats, in his play, "The Hour Glass," uses the memorable phrase, "One sinks in upon God." A witty lady, one of the members of our group, once adapted that phrase in speaking to me of Keohler, and, for me at least, her words hold no suggestion of irreverance: "One sinks in upon Keohler," said she.

The First Poem

Some months after our first meeting, Keohler suggested to me that I should join him in one of those brief holidays which he was able to snatch from what must have been a life of distasteful clerical work, and we went together to stay at a farmhouse on the hills above Enniskerry. It was here that on a fine evening in autumn, as we sat above the little river which runs through the village, we seemed to get, almost simultaneously, the idea of expressing ourselves "in the written word." We each perpetrated a "poem." His, a much better effort than mine, was never, as far as I know, allowed to appear in print. Mine, by some chance, came into the hands of H. F. Norman, who was, at that time, on the staff of The Irish Homestead, and was passed on by him to Susan Mitchell, also a member of the editorial staff, and to my amazement I saw for the first time a poem of my own in print. William Bulfin, Editor of The Southern Cross, by some accident read this early attempt and, again to my astonishment, reprinted it in his paper. "Is this fame?" wrote Susan Mitchell in a letter which she sent me enclosing the cutting from The Southern Cross. Fame it was to a young author who thus saw his earliest versifying sent to the uttermost parts of the world, and The Irish Homestead of a few months later contained my second attempt in verse. Both appeared over a pseudonym, and I sincerely hope that no inquisitive collector of "Anglo-Irish" literature will ever unearth them. "Cursed who brings to light of day, the verses I have thrown away." Amen, I say, to Yeats's prayer.

Bulfin, the editor of The Southern Cross, afterwards came on a long visit to Ireland, and I have delightful memories of hours spent with him in the company of Arthur Griffith, O'Leary Curtis, Seumas O'Connolly and others—evenings in which we listened enthralled to his stories of the Pampas and his adventures in the Argentine. I have never met a man who could tell a better story, or tell it better. In his book, "Rambles Around Ireland," he has left a record of a Sunday morning on which he came with Arthur Griffith to visit Oliver Gogarty, Trench and myself in our tower at Sandycove, but most of our meetings took place at night in my rooms in Blessington street. He was a magnificent type, physically and intellectually, and no one who has met him and listened to him as he told of "Andy and the dish of beans," or of other characters and places, can ever forget him.

Padraic Colum

Shortly after that holiday in Ballybrow I first met Padraic Colum, who had recently arrived in Dublin, and on a Sunday morning—why is it, I wonder, that so many things worth remembering happened on that particular day?—he came to my father's house on the Rathmines road. The talk turned on Arthur Griffith and his paper, The United Irishman. "Why don't you give him something?" said Colum. I, with becoming modesty, and in all earnestness, replied that I had nothing worth printing. "Let's have a look," said Colum, and I forthwith produced from my pocket a few "Copies of verses" recently composed, for I had, since my first appearance in The Irish Homestead, resolved to go forward in the attempt to express myself in verse and with the hope of being able, eventually, to do so in poetry. Colum selected a poem, and I consented to let him hand it to Arthur Griffith, but on the distinct understanding that it was not to appear over my name. I asked him to suggest a pen-name, and he found one for me. "Why not," he said, "use your own Christian names and omit the surname?" I thought the idea a good one, and accordingly my first contribution to The United Irishman appeared over the name of "Seumas O'Sullivan." The verses, as they appeared in The United Irishman, were entitled "The Wind in the Hazels"; but when they were reprinted later in book form the title was, at the suggestion of A.E., altered to "The Twilight People"—an alteration which I had later many reasons to regret. Tom Kettle, in a review of my first book which he contributed to The New Ireland Review, expressed very accurately my own feelings about the matter when he wrote, in an otherwise appreciative notice, that the title "held a hint of parody." The word "Twilight," with its associations of "Celtic Twilight," "Twilight School," etc., had already become to most of us—the younger writers—a menace long before the word had been resurrected by certain critics as a stick with which to beat anyone or anything at variance with that modern school of poets who think it necessary, in the words of Edmund Gosse, to introduce their verses with a prelude of "slate pencils scratching across a slate."

Political Books

The World Turns Left. By Gerald Abrahams. W. H. Allen. 10/6 net.

MR. ABRAHAMS' thesis that there is a tendency in modern society towards increasing collectivism and State control, is neither novel nor alarming, but his mode of expression is both. The lack of fusion in the style is a symbol of Mr. Abrahams's failure to achieve his double purpose, which was to prove his thesis by an analytic method, and, at the same time, to show that increasing collectivism is a step forward, or, in his own words, "a phase in the slow turning of the human world out of the jarring spirals of past evolution into the freer phases of a larger system."

France is a Democracy. By Louis Levy. Gollancz. 5/- net.

The chief merit of this little volume by a distinguished French socialist journalist is the discussion of the territorial politics of France. Perhaps the most surprising feature is the strength and influence of a Protestant republican tradition. One is apt to overlook the contribution of Protestantism to modern French politics, and to look on France as fundamentally a Roman Catholic country. M. Levy shows what a grave misconception this is, and his detailed study of the general political background, though violently prejudiced, will provide a useful corrective to much that has recently been written.

Pictorial History of Russia. By Alexander Howard and Ernest Newman. Hutchinson. 14/6 net.

This collection of pictures and photographs, covering Russian history from the earliest times to the present war, will have value in conveying to the ordinarily misinformed reader some idea of the background of the Soviet Union. More than a sketch it cannot pretend to give, however, and the reader who is familiar with Russian history will find it interesting, but not enlightening. For him, the tables of facts at the back will be the most valuable part of the volume.

Constructive Democracy. By John MacMurray. Faber and Faber. 2/6 net.

These two lectures by the distinguished philosopher are intended to justify the liberal who is forced by modern conditions to forsake the tradition of laissez-faire, and to adopt some system of State socialism or State economic control. Professor MacMurray recognises that this is the characteristic evolution of our own time, and he terms it the evolution from negative to positive government. His main object, then, is to show that this positive government can also imply a positive democracy, and deserve the support of liberal thought. In negative democracy he sees the chief power of the representatives of the people, in their ability to refuse supplies, and he realises full well that, where the State has taken over control of the economic resources, some other source of power will have to be found. Unfortunately, he has not been able to provide an answer to this point, and, consequently, though there can be no question of the accuracy of his interpretation of the present transition period, these lectures will not provide any abiding liberal philosophy with which to live through our governmental changes.

Bernadotte

Sergeant Belle-Jambe. By Simon Dewes. Rich and Cowan. 12/6 net.

THIS is the story of Jean-Baptiste Bernadotte, who was born the son of the poverty-stricken procureur of the small township of Pau, in Gascony, and who ended an extraordinary career by being crowned King of Sweden. Mr. Dewes has a boundless admiration for his hero—an admiration which sometimes obstructs his objectivity. Bernadotte, the soldier, is shown for the great figure he really was; but Mr. Dewes, one suspects against his better judgment, attempts in vain to make a great figure out of Bernadotte, the politician. The main virtue of the book is the picture it paints of Napoleonic times. Where could one find a more striking example of the "carrière ouverts aux talents" than in the life of Bernadotte?

Tim Pippin's Adventures

Giant-Land. By "Roland Quiz." Joiner and Steel. 8/6 net.

SINCE his first appearance, in the last century, Tim Pippin has had a constant succession of admirers—witness the fact that there have been three new editions of this account of his adventures in the last seven years. The story of Tim's adventures with Giant Bigfeet, Body-Snatcher, Uncle Two-Heads and the rest, and his final elevation to be King of the Marble Palace, is straightforward and unsophisticated, in the authentic fairy-tale tradition, but it is hard to believe that even the most modern child could fail be be thrilled by the glorious and incredible string of adventures. The illustrations by "Puck" are admirable.

The Human Comedy

The Human Comedy. By William Saroyan. Faber and Faber. 7/6 net.

SOME time ago Mr. George Jean Nathan found occasion to consider at some length the question whether Mr. William Saroyan was a genius or a lunatic. In the end he decided, by whatever margin, in favour of the genius, and one may believe that he was right. Mr. Saroyan has been the most irritating of modern writers. He has cast off the rags of cynicism and sophistication of the 'twenties, and burst into prose with an exuberant expression of the value of living; he has dragged out words like Love from the clutches of the song writers, and used them with unashamed simplicity; he has behaved very like a small-town boy, and infuriated the critics, because, instead of the humility befitting his position, he has displayed a hugely naïve confidence in his own genius. It may be annoying to hear him asserting so often that he is a writer of supreme originality and importance, but it is impossible to deny it.

"The Human Comedy" is Mr. Saroyan's first novel. It is useless to assess its merit by comparison with other writers; for Mr. Sarayon cannot be compared with anybody. In the body of his own work—until now confined to short stories and plays—it must rank very high. Like most writers who refuse to accept any discipline, William Saroyan has had to learn to discipline himself. He has learnt to modulate the raw vigour of some of his earlier writing, and the result is a book of undiminished charm and of increased sensitivity.

The story tells of the Macauley family, living in the small town of Ithaca, California; it centres upon Homer Macauley, aged fourteen, and his four-year-old brother, Ulysses. Mr. Saroyan has always had a special talent for writing about children; for his simple, direct approach to the wonder of life is very much like a child's. Homer Macauley and the boys of Ithaca; Marcus Macauley and his friends in the Army; Bess Macauley and the soldiers in the cinema, the drunken old telegraphist and the young manager of the office, the people around the town, Mrs. Macauley voicing the author's views on life—all are handled with the tenderness that Mr. Saroyan is not ashamed to show. Some of the scenes are very funny, almost all are gently humorous. But the triumph of the book is the portrait of Ulysses Macauley—four years old, grave, interested, sketched with genuine love by an author who can be loving without being sentimental.

"The Human Comedy" is a fine book by a great writer. Few works nowadays can be spoken of in such terms.

An Irish Poet

Legacy to Love. By John Gawsworth. Collins. 5/- net.

TEN years of the cream of a poet's activity is contained in this little book. The reader who possesses the earlier works of Mr. Gawsworth from "Marks of the Pits" to "After Duty" will find great interest in discovering the development and change which have taken place in the writer as maturity and the impact of the war years chisel and mould him. A deepening of thought and of emotion is evident, and a growing melodiousness.

This, however, might easily have been foreseen from a careful perusal of the writer's earlier books. Always has there been a preoccupation with beauty, scenery, the homelier things, such things as find voice in "So Now September Ends," "Regret," "The Bridge," and "Mortality." In all of these country things and natural beauties form the background.

So now September ends: above the sea
One drifting gull emits his plaintive cry
Haunting and keeping lonely watch with me
Wheeling above the shadows from the sky.

Or, as from "The Bridge":

There is peace found at the town's end
Where the Roman bridge spans the stream
Beneath the stunted willows rushes bend
Swaying above the shallows where scales gleam;
The silver fish there, darting above stones.

On the other hand, "A Man Speaks" is as grim a little poem as has been written:

The night they found her in the pool
The fly was busy there;
The spider fast unwound his spool
And plummeted to stare.

These are fine things, and, in a manner, evocative of the poet's muse. For Gawsworth is no gentle poet, despite his love of nature and the kindly matters of men. His art is austere, aloof and severe, at times, near to dryness—all of which proceeds from his rigid pruning of unnecessary words and images. The final poem in his book is well worth quoting in entirety:

These are my acres bare and brown
Beneath my cottage beech roots creep
And soon the structure they will down
And soon I shall lie down to sleep.

It will not matter then what man
Is overlord or what man slave
The conscript as a craven can
Outface the boaster and the brave;

So I must be considered one
Who fought to save his farm and field
And left his shy place in the sun
To prove not even poets yield.

One who has read the work of this distinguished poet will trust that Mr. Gawsworth will be restored to us safe and sound, to continue the fine career which his work most certainly augurs.

Love

Love. Compiled by Walter de la Mare. Faber and Faber. 25/- net.

MR. WALTER DE LA MARE'S anthology—the word must be used—contains some 700 pages, and includes an introduction of 100 pages and over 700 selections from writers of both verse and prose. "If I could have written on the subject of love as I should wish to do," Mr. de la Mare wrote to his publisher, "then here (in incomparably richer terms) is that survey, that testimony." The survey ranges from Villon to that hard-headed marriage expert William Cobbett; from Miss Sitwell to the Statute Book; from Queen Elizabeth to Havelock Ellis; from Lucretius to Dr. Gogarty. The fine things, the lovely things, and the entertaining things in the volume are beyond number, for the compiler's taste is very sure; yet few people will read it through. Mr. de la Mare would have done better to cut his menu to a quarter of its length, however much the paring hurt him; this profusion of rich meats is too much for a wartime stomach.

Lest it be missed by the book-store prospectors, here is a gem from the collection—translated by Mr. Arthur Waley, from the original of the Emperor Wu-Ti:

The sound of her silk skirt has stopped.
On the marble pavement dust grows.
Her empty room is cold and still.
Fallen leaves are piled against the doors.
Longing for that lovely lady
How can I bring my aching heart to rest?

Causes of Accidents to Irish Ships

CRITICISM of the masters and first mates of two Irish ships—the s.s. Irish Plane and the s.s. Moyalla—are contained in the official reports of the Courts of Enquiry which sat this year to investigate the stranding of the first of these ships at Tor Point, Co. Antrim, and the sinking of the other while in dock at Limerick. The Court, reporting on the Irish Plane mishap, also suggests that clarification is required of the jurisdiction of Irish authorities over Irish ships and their crews.

The report on the stranding of the Irish Plane states that £14,640 worth of damage was caused, in addition to loss sustained by its being put out of commission. Its chief findings about the causes of the stranding were that it was due to:

(1) "An unaccountable error" by Mr. Frank Edward Morley, first mate, when he made a calculation which resulted in the vessel being steered 30 degrees south of her correct course.

(2) Poor visibility, aggravated by the effects of the necessary neutrality floodlighting.

(3) The negligence of the Master, Captain Thomas Wallace Freehill, in failing to check efficiently the course calculated by the First Mate; in allowing the vessel to proceed at maximum speed after failing to sight a certain buoy, and in not endeavouring to test in any way whether the proper course was being followed when the buoy failed to appear.

ALTERED COURSE

The Court, which consisted of District Justice Hugh McCann, assisted by Captain V. E. Gore-Hickman and Captain Charles J. Hanrahan, nautical assessors, sat at various dates between January 4th and May 5th of this year.

The Irish Plane, the report sets out, was a ship of 4,670 gross tonnage, built in 1917 at Newark, New Jersey. In February, 1942, she went to Gourock, in Scotland. From Gourock she sailed for St. John's, New Brunswick, on March 14th, in foggy weather. That evening Mr. Morley, in altering the course of the vessel, made an error in his calculation, which had the effect of taking her 30 degrees off her correct course.

At 10.22 p.m. the vessel struck the rocks at Tor Point, Co. Antrim, visibility being about two miles and weather conditions hazy. The Master told the wireless operator to send out a message that they had grounded at the Mull of Cantyre, but this was afterwards corrected.

During the inquiry Mr. E. K. Carson, K.C. (who appeared for the Master), referred to "the appalling, maligning, malicious falsehoods" uttered publicly about his client, and said that questions had been put at the inquiry about the sobriety of the Master and other members of the crew. The report states that there was no evidence offered to the Court that the Master or any member of the crew was drunk or incapable through consumption of intoxicating drink.

Among the submissions made during the inquiry was one that the Court had no juridiction to suspend or cancel the certificate of any officer issued by the British Board of Trade after the Treaty. The Court states that this submission would call for a judicial decision if raised in a proper place.

It was also submitted that the Secretary of State for Great Britain was the authority entitled to appoint or remove assessors, and that the Minister for Justice in Eire did not have this authority. To this the Court replied that the Minister for Justice had such authority by the Adaptation of Enactments Act, 1922.

A submission was also made that Irish vessels, to be properly manned, must be manned by officers holding certificates issued by the Irish Minister for Industry and Commerce, and that the Irish Plane was not manned in this way. The Court stated in reply that the position about the validity of British certificates in this country, and the desirability of having special Irish certificates called for clarification, and that steps should be taken by way of convention, international agreement or legislation to secure that end.

The report states that the Court was not in a position to make such a finding of guilt as would justify it in imposing a penalty on an officer who had not been definitely identified and formally charged with specified wrongful acts or defaults.

OVERLOADING

The Court of Inquiry on the sinking of the Moyalla consisted of District Justice Flood, assisted by Commander O'Brien Twohig, Harbour Master, Dublin, and Captain R. E. Kellett, headmaster, Hibernian Marine School, Clontarf. It sat in June last and inquired into the sinking of the Moyalla, of 642 gross tons, built in Dundee in 1927, the property of the Limerick Steamship Co. It sunk in dock at Limerick on October 31st, 1941.

The Court found that the sinking was due to gross overloading aft and loss of stability due to faulty stowage of heavy cargo on the poopdeck aft. The Court, while not finding the master, Captain E. J. O'Sullivan, in default, considers that as he visited the vessel at a time when it had excessive trim by the stern he should have observed this.

The Court considers that the first mate, Mr. S. McMahon, was at fault in not seeing that an order he gave to cease loading was obeyed, and that the stevedore, Mr. Purtill, was at fault for disobeying the orders given him by the first mate. The owners were not responsible for the sinking of the vessel, but the Court considers that the arrangements made by them were not sufficient to prevent the sinking of the vessel.

Better Planning for Holiday Season

A STRONG plea for the creation of a National Trust is made in the annual report of the Irish Tourist Association, to be presented to its members at a general meeting next Thursday.

It follows a statement that very few councils have adopted planning schemes in accordance with the Town and Regional Planning Act.

The Association would like to see many ancient buildings, at present uncared for, put under the charge of the Board of Works. "There are," the statement continues, "numerous other buildings, sites and places of historic or scenic interest which could more appropriately be vested in a National Trust, and we make a plea for the founding of such an institution. The Trust, too, would become the custodian of other humbler houses which, because of their association with famous Irishmen and Irishwomen, should be preserved by the nation."

FEW COMPLAINTS

Complaints to the Irish Tourist Association from visitors were not numerous in proportion to the volume of traffic," says the report. "But the unpleasant fact remains that there are among our caterers certain unscrupulous individuals, who do not hesitate to take advantage of circumstances which have occasioned an abnormal demand for their service. This state of affairs cannot be tolerated, and we feel that, in the interests of visitors, and in the interests of our members, steps should be taken by the Irish Tourist Board to bring their scheme for registration and grading of hotels into force without further delay. It is the only remedy we can see."

The influx of visitors from Northern Ireland assumed remarkable proportions in 1943, and led for an unprecedented demand for accommodation in Dublin and in East Coast resorts.

The report on the accounts states that £5,402 was spent on the Association's topographical survey, and that the expenditure of a further £8,000 has been sanctioned.

After-care in T.B. Treatment

In the past twenty-five years 93,361 pints of milk, 15,382 food orders valued at five shillings each, and 12,566 articles of clothing have been provided, together with advice and assistance, by the Peamount After-Care Guild, says Professor T. Gillman Moorhead in a foreword to the Guild's silver jubilee souvenir book.

"Early diagnosis, prompt and efficient treatment and after-care are the three main factors essential for a successful campaign against tuberculosis, and if the third factor is lacking the others are largely robbed of their effectiveness," he writes.

The Peamount After-Care Guild, he points out, is unique, because it concerns itself also with the patient and his family before admission to the sanatorium. When the diagnosis is made and it is decided that the patient should be sent to a sanatorium, the Guild sees that all contacts are examined and that advice and help are given to those who remain at home. While the patient is undergoing treatment provision is made for the disinfection of the house or rooms which may have been contaminated, and an effort is made to maintain the physical and economic standard of the family.

Tribute to Minister

Mr. Sean T. O'Kelly got a pat on the back from the Dublin Society of Chartered Accountants, who held their annual general meeting in Dublin on Wednesday. The outgoing Chairman (Mr. T. Condren Flinn, F.C.A.) said: "Legislation as regards the functions of chartered accountants has again been negligible and the generosity of the Minister for Finance on another Budget has left me with no stones to throw into the Governmental glass-house."

He expressed a doubt, however, about whether this peaceful atmosphere could prevail much longer, and warned members to anticipate a more difficult future until the war was over. Even then perhaps, he said, increasing difficulties must make the work of accountants more onerous and responsible.

Apple Prices Challenges Not Accepted

THE challenges on apple prices have not been accepted.

Mr. J. P. Knowles, managing director of Messrs. Knowles and Company, Grafton street, Dublin, makes the following comment on Mr. R. Segrave Daly's counter-challenge. "We note that Mr. Segrave Daly says that we are wagering on a certainty. Of course, we are. That is the crux of the whole controversy, namely, the certainty that it is absolutely impossible for Mr. Segrave Daly to prove the sensational and preposterous statements he has made, for the simple reason that they are not true. On the contrary, they are a grotesque travesty of the truth. He realises that, and covers his tracks with all sorts of absurd excuses."

The controversy began when Mr. Knowles challenged Mr. Segrave Daly to the amount of £50 on his statement that cooking apples which he had sold at a fraction over a penny were retailed in Dublin at 8d. Mr. Segrave Daly replied with a counter-challenge. He wants the issue based on an assertion that apples similar in quality and variety to those which brought him one and one-sixth of a penny were sold at 8d. in Dublin. He wagers one-third the value of his fruit crop this season against Mr. Knowles' £50.

A COMPARISON

TO THE EDITOR OF THE IRISH TIMES

SIR,—I note that a Wicklow grower sent a consignment of apples to a Dublin retailer. This grower must be in a very large way, because the consignment was a big one of no less than 2 st. Leaving aside the absolute nonsense about his being able to identify some apples he saw in the retail shop a few days later as being his own, I should be interested to see a solution to this singular conundrum.

He was bitterly dissatisfied with the price of 6s. per st. which he got from the retailer and then started selling his apples to Wicklow shopkeepers, and says that he is getting 8d. per doz. for them. Now, apples of the type about which he speaks average about 4 to the lb., so that a dozen would weigh about 3 lbs. For this 3 lbs. he gets 8d., which is rather less than 3d. per lb. But call it 3d. per lb. That means 3s. 6d. per st. This proves two things: Firstly, that the apples are rubbish, and, secondly, that Dublin retailers give him a very good price.—Yours, etc., THE RETAILER.

Child Gets £1,600 for Loss of Arm

In the Northern Ireland King's Bench Division, yesterday, the Lord Chief Justice approved a settlement for £1,600 of an action in which Elizabeth Andrews (11), by her father, William Andrews, of Rose Cottage, Upper Ballysillan, Ligoniel, Belfast, sued Sir Lindsay Parkinson and Co., Ltd., Shaftesbury avenue, London. Plaintiff was knocked down by one of defendant's lorries, and her right arm was amputated at the shoulder.

False Statement Fine

Frederick J. Monson, farmer, Castlemoate, Cloghran, Co. Dublin, was fined £20 by District Justice Molony in the District Courts yesterday for giving false information to the Department of Supplies when making application for kerosene.

The defence was that a mistake had been made, as the defendant had a permit for 300 gallons of kerosene, of which he drew only 120 gallons.

Mr. Molony said that it was a bona-fide mistake, and defendant's statement showed that the kerosene was not being used illegally. However, it was a serious matter for the country, and must not go unpunished. If it had been deliberate he would have had to impose a sentence of imprisonment.

Using Sieved Flour

For using flour other than straight-run, Mrs. Esther O'Hanlon, Phibsboro' place, Dublin, was fined £4, with £1 expenses, by District Justice Lennon in Dublin yesterday. An official of the Department of Supplies said that since the prosecutions for this kind of offence had been instituted the practice of sieving flour had stopped. There were two sacks of flour and two and a half sacks of offal found on Mrs. O'Hanlon's premises.

He also said that at present the allocation of flour was 110 per cent. on 1940 purchases.

Guards Attacked in Dublin Street

A FREE-FOR-ALL fight in which three Civic Guards were attacked with bricks, bottles and stones, injured in the face, body and arms, kicked in the legs and had their batons broken, was described in the Dublin Circuit Criminal Court yesterday. About 200 people were present at the incident, which occurred in Gardiner street on June 26th last, and, of these, about 160 were spectators. None of these spectators made any effort to go to the assistance of the attacked Guards, a witness told Judge Davitt.

The case was one in which James Watson (30), Lower Gardiner street, pleaded not guilty to having assaulted Guard Thomas Malone; while Patrick O'Reilly (25), labourer, of Ballybough road, Dublin; Edward Humphrey (30), unemployed, of St. Mary's Mansions, Sean MacDermott street; Private Thomas O'Neill (33), of Middle Gardiner street, and Mrs. Mary Lawless, of Middle Gardiner street, pleaded not guilty to charges of riotous assembly and of assaulting Guards Thomas Malone, Maurice Bracken and Michael Hynes.

Mr. R. McLoughlin (instructed by the Chief State Solicitor), prosecuting, said that a crowd had assembled outside a public-house at the corner of Gardiner street and Parnell street between 11.30 p.m. and midnight on Saturday, June 26th. Guards Malone and Hynes had told the crowd to move off and they had done so. When Guard Malone was returning, Watson, who was standing at the public-house with a child in his arms, started to taunt Guard Malone. They came to grips, and when Guard Bracken went to Guard Malone's assistance, Watson said he would give no trouble. Later the people who were near started to throw stones and assault the Guards, and Watson escaped. The other four defendants were in the crowd. Two of the Guards had to be treated in hospital and were off duty for days.

Mrs. Mary Lawless, sister of James Watson, said that the crowd were attacking the Guards because they wanted her brother set free.

The hearing of the case was adjourned until Monday next.

NEWS IN BRIEF

Cardinal MacRory.—Cardinal MacRory was present at Solemn High Mass in St. Patrick's Cathedral, Armagh, yesterday, to mark the commencement of the Quarant Ore devotions.

Girl for Industrial School.—District Justice Price, at Bray yesterday, committed a girl aged 11 years to an industrial school in Dublin until November 8, 1947, on the grounds that she had not a parent to look after her.

New Peace Commissioner.—Mr. James J. Hart, 174 Botanic road, and 1 Finglas road, Glasnevin, has been appointed Peace Commissioner for the City of Dublin, and the adjoining County of Dublin.

Bicycle Thief Sentenced.—A suspended sentence of six months' imprisonment was imposed by Judge Davitt, in the Dublin Circuit Criminal Court yesterday, on James Brown (28), carrier, Spencer street, Dublin, who was convicted of stealing a bicycle in March, 1940.

Ground Rent Purchase Plan.—At the meeting of the Blackrock Branch of the United Leaseholders' Association resolutions were passed reiterating the demand for immediate legislation to deal with the setting up of a Fair Rent Tribunal with a view to enabling leaseholders to purchase their ground rents on fair terms.

Rate Collector for Trial.—William J. Warren (48), Rate Collector, Dublin Corporation, was returned for trial by District Justice McCann in the District Court yesterday, charged with embezzlement of £397. There were in all 29 counts. Mr. McCann said there was evidence in 28 to submit to a jury—he refused informations in one case.

Dublin Man on Fraud Charge—Henry Patrick Ridgeway, timber merchant, a native of Dublin was given a suspensory sentence of three months' imprisonment by District Justice Flattery at Sligo for issuing worthless cheques and obtaining money by false pretences. Ridgeway was also bound over for three years, and it was stated that he had repaid £60 of the amount of money involved.

Military Service Pensions Claims.—Mr. Justice Haugh, in the High Court, Dublin, yesterday, granted conditional orders of certiorari to James Beck, Marches street, Thomastown; Martin Drea, Jerpoint West, Thomastown, and Richard Kiely, Scart, Ballinamult, Waterford, directed to the Minister for Defence to bring into the court for the purpose of being quashed, reports of the Referee under the Military Service Pensions Act, 1934, rejecting their claims for pensions.

Minister to Pay £150.—Judge Shannon, in the Circuit Civil Court yesterday, made an award of £100 to Mrs. Moya McGrath, national teacher, William street House, Wexford, and £50 to her son, Desmond, a minor, in settlement of a Workman's Compensation Act claim against the Minister for Finance. The claim was in respect of the death of Captain Nicholas McGrath, who died from heart failure, following a fall into the water between the quay and a Department of Defence boat, of which he was captain at Bere Island on January 6th last.

Price of Onions

Onions, which producers are selling for 2½d. per lb., are being offered by some Dublin greengrocers for 8d. a pound—and are costing the patrons of at least one city hotel 1s. 3d. a portion.

Most of the onions are grown in Kerry, and are sold in the Dublin Market to retailers at a maximum rate of 3¼d. per lb. "Admittedly, the quality is bad, and, as the onions are soft, a certain amount of waste is involved," a well-known market expert told an Irish Times reporter yesterday, "but the loss sustained should not justify the retail price asked at present when there are plenty of onions in the country."

Potatoes are plentiful also, and will be for some time to come. The price, however, has not decreased since it was forced up about a month ago by a temporary shortage which occurred when harvesting interfered with digging. Despite the fact that supplies are once again adequate, the wholesale price still ranges from 9s. to 10s. a hundredweight, although before the shortage it was only about 8s. a hundredweight.

More Strikes in America

A critical fuel shortage following the walk-out of 20,000 Alabama (U.S.A.) coalminers resulted yesterday in a sharp curtailment in steel and iron production, Reuter cables. At Terre Haute, Indiana, nearly 3,500 miners in eleven of the largest mines of the Indiana bituminous coalfield are on strike.

At the Federal Shipbuilding and Dry-dock Company, Kearny, New Jersey, 1,000 have stopped work.

Mr. Harold Ickes, United States Coal and Petroleum Administrator, in a letter to the Chairman of the War Labour Board, says he fears another general coal strike unless the coal dispute is settled.

Across the Dnieper

The Dnieper has proved itself a less formidable obstacle to the Russian advance than was expected. Already the river has been crossed at four major points, where the Red Army is exerting every effort to consolidate its hard-won "bridgeheads." Resistance everywhere is fierce; the retiring Germans decline to abandon any position until its defence is beyond all hope. In the neighbourhood of Kiev, where the Russians crossed both northwards and southwards of the city some time ago, the struggle is particularly ferocious; for a junction of the two wings of the Red Army is bound to mean the encirclement and surrender—or death—of the German defenders. The most spectacular news of the week, however, has been the fall of Zaporozhe, one of the extreme points on the celebrated "Dnieper bend," and the fact that fighting is taking place in the streets of Melitopol, 70 miles further south. It is reported that the Russians have shown no inclination to halt in Zaporozhe, but, instead, have continued their advance well beyond the town. This progress has confronted the Germans with a danger of the first magnitude. There is no natural line of defence for a very long way to the west of the southern reaches of the Dnieper, and there seems—so far as one may judge from the map—to be no reason why the Russian advance should be stayed until it has swept towards the sea in the vicinity of Kherson. If the Russians can make the necessary speed things threaten to go hard with the Axis troops who are south of the river bend—including those in the Crimea. Meanwhile, the Soviet threat in the northern reaches of the river grows more urgent daily. Reuter reports that the Red Army is fighting its severely impeded way into the heart of Gomel, which has been burning for the past four days, and, nearly two hundred miles further to the north, the key town of Vitebsk is enduring the most severe assaults. Even yet, while the rigour of the Russian winter approaches, it is impossible to determine what is in the mind of the rival High Commands. For some time there was a strong possibility that the Germans would be able to hold their positions on the Dnieper bank and defy all Soviet efforts to cross the river—which is a truly formidable line of defence from the west. Now that several bridgeheads have been established, and that—according to reports from both sides—the Russians are sending troops across the river in very considerable strength, a new strategic phase begins. Quite apart from the struggle in the extreme south, where the Germans, unless they move with remarkable speed, are likely to be encircled by the Red forces thrusting out of the Kremenchug and Zaporozhe bridgeheads, the question lies whether the Russians have power enough to keep their enemy further up the river on the retreat. The map is never an infallible guide, but a study of it suggests that, once clear of the Dnieper, the Russians will be able to proceed with every advantage on their side—and no disadvantage of nature's contriving.

"See Dublin First"

The publication of the annual report of the Irish Tourist Association draws attention once more to the subject of "tourism." The holiday season now past has made it clearer than ever that, at present, Dublin is Ireland's greatest holiday resort. In part, her position is due to temporary conditions—such, for instance, as the restrictions upon transport and the allurement of unrationed steak; but it gives the sign that, if she takes the proper steps, Dublin may secure for herself a permanent and lucrative place in the list of Europe's tourist centres. Before the war the capital cities of the Continent were the centres of greatest attraction for visitors from these islands and from America; France meant Paris, Austria meant Vienna, Italy meant Rome. They were not content to be mere conduit-pipes to the beauty spots of their respective countries. Ireland, on the other hand, was centred, for the tourist, upon Killarney, and often, on his way from Boston, Mass., he turned aside at Cobh only long enough to "do" the lakes, and then rushed on to Paris. Yet Dublin enjoys advantages which, in sum, scarcely could be paralleled by any other capital city. Within an hour's run by car there are spread around her seaside resorts, mountains, rivers, lakes; the panorama of Killiney Bay, the wild hillsides of Wicklow, the wooded valley of the Boyne; country for walking, cycling, shooting, hunting; streams for fishing; rivers and sea for swimming and boating. If the city can furnish its own attractions, it will supply a nucleus to these surrounding charms. The city, indeed, must make an effort—well worth making for such a rich prize. Much can be done by the Irish Tourist Board, which already has been empowered to begin its work; publicity—the sine qua non—listing and proper control of hotels and such establishments, adequate guide-books, information offices, and so on. Unfortunately, the Board must confine itself to more or less profit-earning schemes, and can exercise only a gentle encouragement on local bodies. The greatest part of the work must be done by the city authorities themselves and by the Government; for the development of Dublin as a tourist centre would benefit the whole country. They must take in hand the planning of the city and its neighbourhood with an eye to beauty as well as utility; they must prevent indiscriminate building, and demolish eyesores fearlessly; they must give serious attention to proposals—if at all practicable—for boulevards along the river and the canals, and the opening of parks all over the city. Such schemes not merely would satisfy the Dubliner who is anxious to be proud of his city, and the Irishman who is anxious to be proud of his capital: they would bring a solid return in the money of tourists. We will have a lead after the war; for we have had leisure to make our plans, and to begin to execute them, while our neighbours have been occupied with sterner matters. We have one of the few unbombed capital cities in Europe. It will be our shame as a nation if we allow the others to rise in beauty from their ashes while we sit and cherish our dust.

IRISH DOGS FLOWN TO BRITAIN

Puppies for the British dog market and for stud purposes in British kennels are now regular passengers in Aer Lingus 'planes. An average of three a week crosses the Channel by air, as Irish breeders take advantage of a boom which has raised pre-war prices by twenty-five to one hundred per cent. British dogs, too, are being flown to Ireland.

Most of the dogs are less-popular breeds — bull-terriers, pomeranians and dachshunds. Greyhounds are not popular travellers. After a recent flight it was found that one of them had consumed portion of the aeroplane. Before embarking dogs must be safely crated in such a way that they are able to stand up, sit down and lie down. They are brought to the airport by officials of Lep Transport, Ltd., and are met at Liverpool by more officials of the same company before sending them on the second stage of their journey by rail. Dogs cost their owners 1s. 10½d. a pound, with a minimum charge of 12s. 6d.

AWARDS TO ULSTER GAELIC WRITERS

The Dr. Douglas Hyde Literary Fund has made two awards to Ulster Gaelic writers for original works in Irish published last year. Seamus O Grianna got the principal award, known as Duais an Chraoibhin, for his latest book, "Nuair a Bhi Me Og" (Talbot Press). The second went to Sean Mac Maolain for his work, "I mBeal Feirste Dhom" (Publications Branch, Department of Education). The awards will be presented at the opening meeting of the Oireachtas on October 23rd.

OBITUARY

MRS. LIA CLARKE

With sincere regret we announce the death of Mrs. Lia Clarke, well known in journalistic circles, which took place in a Dublin nursing home yesterday from pneumonia, following an operation. Her maiden name was Cummins, her mother being a Miss Blake, of Ballinamona, Thomastown, Co. Kilkenny, and her grandfather the late Joseph Ronayne, M.P. for Cork. She was educated at a convent in Waterford and at Mount Anville, Dundrum, Co. Dublin, before proceeding to Vienna, where she studied medicine.

Travelling extensively on the Continent, she became a fluent German speaker, and had a good working knowledge of Italian and Spanish. She had a very fluent pen and quick imagination, and, on returning to Ireland, published many short stories, one of which was included in a collection of the "Year's Best Short Stories." She also wrote quite a number of excellent poems—including a volume under the pen-name of "Margaret Lyster." She was the personal friend of many of the most famous Irish artists and writers of the day; and "A.E." once painted her portrait.

But to those who were among her friends she will best be remembered for the vivacity of her conversation, her lively wit, and, above all, her fondness for argument, particularly about latter-day European affairs—on which she had very strong views which she never hesitated to voice. One missed her cheery presence during the last few months, but, though it was known that her illness was serious, the news of her passing came as a painful surprise.

The funeral will take place from Donnybrook Church this morning at 10 o'clock.

DUBLIN CENTRAL MISSION

TO THE EDITOR OF THE IRISH TIMES

Sir,—It is agreed that this will be a hard winter for the poor. What is meant is that it will be harder than at present. Already there is widespread hardship. There are very many who are cold, hungry and ill-clad. Little children are the worst sufferers.

For fifty years the above Mission has stood for social service in addition to its spiritual ministry. Over two years ago a special emergency scheme was inaugurated. A turf bog was acquired, a food depôt opened, and a clothing centre established. Approximately £3,000 has been spent over and above the Mission's ordinary social expenditure.

Clothing is urgently required. The most urgent need, however, is for £500 to provide fuel and food. This is an emergency appeal. It should be understood that it is additional to the Christmas appeal to be made in December. Those who believe that an extra effort is required will provide the extra help.

All contributions will be gratefully acknowledged.—Yours, etc.,

(Rev.) Johnstone Hunter.

Dublin Central Mission, George's Hall, South Gt. George's street, Dublin.

ST. PHILIP'S PARISH

The alteration in the hour of Service at St. Philip's Parish Church, Temple road, will come into effect on Sunday, November 7th, from which date Morning Service will commence at 11 a.m.

CRUISKEEN LAWN

By Myles na gCopaleen

ONE humours those who are ill but really, some people are very unreasonable. Take the grandfather, for instance. Nothing would do him the other night but take it into his head to die, choosing the hour of midnight for this somewhat personal activity. It would happen, of course, that I had a heavy cold—there I was at the fire huddled up like an owl, sucking punch. Then this message from upstairs. Really, I did think it trying. Think of it—rising from the fire, lighting storm lantern, pulling on the old waders and then into the foul rain; splash splutter splutter across the filthy farm-yard, into the stable, into the fug of the tubercular pony; then grope grope grope in the dark and back again dragging the straps, buckles and chains behind me through the muck. Finally, upstairs with the whole doings and then the ghastly task of attiring in it a man who was expiring.

I mean—granted that he did always say he would die in harness, why choose a night when my own throat was the scene of a great convention of native Irish streptococci? (No wonder I dialled my doctor—Eamon B. 693)

An Extract

"Born Linda Hobbs, Miss Austra Bourne takes her name from her native country—Austra from the first half of Australia, Bourne from the second half of Melbourne."

One can only congratulate Miss Hobbs on not being born in Dublin. She would then be known as Ire Lin, which would inevitably be changed to Irene Lynn by reporters. My own sister is to be congratulated on not being a famous soprano, because it happens she was born in Belfast. That my swarthy self is not a soprano either is a matter for complacence inasmuch as I first saw the light in that little timbered structure with the green shutters which stands in Kaplinstrasse, Montenegro. A rather lovely bronze plaque, simply inscribed in Irish, marks the spot.

A Further Extract

"To undress each night is an essential act of humility. For only then does one recognise that the body beneath the clothes that have been purchased by toil or talent or beauty or position or privilege is of like flesh to all other human bodies"

—The Spectator.

I disagree, of course. Take my own case. My skin is green. I admit I am exceptional in that respect but even if I were like the rest of men, I doubt very much whether it would be necessary for me to undress to find out what sort of body I had or be astounded every night to find that my body, on being undressed, did not resemble that of a lion, a wren or a Corkman, but was "of like flesh to all human bodies." (But well and good if "flesh" is a misprint for "flush.")

I intend shortly to give my readers a series of articles on dietetics and medical matters. Health is most important, even for readers of the Irish Times. You have heard that word calcium. There you have the secret of vitality, vigour and vim. Optimum intake 50,000 milligrams per day. I have yet to hear of a case (where) a man with satisfactory calcium reserves succumbed to bubonic plague. They throw it off them like old overcoats. Moreover, always remember that he who derives fat toxin should himself be fat.

HARVEST FESTIVALS

Harvest Thanksgiving Services will be held in a number of churches to-morrow:—

St. Bartholomew's.—Preacher at Matins, Rev. Noel Waring. Youth Gift Service at 3.30. Rev. D. Macrory, curate-assistant of St. Stephen's, will preach. Evensong—Canon Parkinson Hill.

Holy Trinity, Rathmines.—Special preachers will be the Rev. C. W. Sowby, Warden of St. Columba's College, and the Bishop of Tuam. At 7.15 the Bishop of Tuam will dedicate a Baptismal ewer. Children's Gift Service at 3.30.

Christ Church, Leeson Park.—Holy Communion, 8 a.m. and 11 a.m.; preacher, the Rt. Rev. J. W. Crozier, Bishop of Tuam. Children's Festival Service, 3.30; Rev. E. A. Carry. 7.15, Most Rev. W. H. Holmes, Bishop of Meath.

St. Mary's, Crumlin.—Preacher at 11.15 and 7.15, the Bishop of Ossory. Children's Gift Service in the afternoon.

Monkstown.—Preacher at 11.30 a.m. and 7.15, Very Rev. George F. Graham, Dean of Kildare. At 11.30 a memorial tablet will be dedicated to the late Mr. B. Warburton Rooke.

St. Ann's.—Holy Communion at 8, and after Morning Prayer at 11.30. Rev. R. J. Kerr will preach at 10.15 and 11.30, and Canon W. Nesbitt Harvey at 7.15. Children's Gift Service at 3.30, and enrolment of Life Boys.

The Free Church.—Preacher at Morning Prayer, 10.15, the Right Rev. A. E. Hughes, Bishop of Kilmore. 3.15 p.m., Children's Service; Rev. B. Harvey, B.D. 7 p.m., the Succentor of St. Patrick's Cathedral. Monday, 8 p.m., Rev. Canon L. Parkinson Hill.

Booterstown.—The preachers will be: Canon W. N. Harvey, rector of Sandford, at 11 a.m., and at 7.15 Rev. S. B. Crooks, curate of Belfast Cathedral.

CITY MISSION

The Rev. T. Byers presided at the annual box-opening and social evening for the workers of the Dublin Presbytery's City Mission, held at the Ormond quay Mission Church. Mr. Robert Robertson, treasurer, announced that the returns from the boxes showed a notable increase compared with last year, and some boxes had still to be sent in. The chairman congratulated the missionary, Mr. E. Logan, and his wife and their band of workers on their splendid work in past years. Solos and duets were contributed by Mr. and Mrs. George Dunlop.

FEEDING CENTRES

A summary, published in the Irish Times yesterday, of the work done by the Marrowbone Lane Samaritan Fund stated that the Fund had opened thirty feeding centres in Dublin. That is not correct. What the Fund says is that, by drawing public attention to the need for the proper feeding of Dublin children, it had assisted in the drive to establish such centres.

LATE REV. DR. J. C. JOHNSTON

A Memorial Service for the late Rev. Dr. J. C. Johnston will be held to-morrow in Abbey Church, Dublin, at 11.30 a.m. The Very Rev. Dr. R. K. Hanna will conduct the Service.

IRISH WILLS

Patrick John McNelis, Nesbitt Arms Hotel, Ardara, Co. Donegal—£20,559 (Eire); Mrs. Alice Beglan, 9 Great Western avenue, North Circular road, Dublin—£2,409 (Eire).

LONDON LETTER

59 FLEET STREET, LONDON, FRIDAY NIGHT.

PRAISING the work of the Emergency Land Corps, which has 50,000 town-living members helping the farmers, Mr. R. S. Hudson, at Salisbury to-night, said that, quite apart from the valuable aid which the corps were giving, another more far-reaching aspect of their work was almost as important. "There has been, for many years, a lack of understanding and sympathy between the towns and the countryside," said the Minister. "Britain came to regard herself as primarily an industrial country, and few people realised what a great industry agriculture here was even before the war, and what a large amount of food it was providing, even in those grim days when it was struggling to keep its head above water. The townspeople forgot that in the rural areas over a million people, with their families, were living and working for their livelihood. The Scott Report the other day rightly pointed to the need for taking some action to bring town and countryside closer together, and these land corps are playing a very valuable part towards that end."

Goose Fair Glamour

Tavistock market was too small to accommodate the stock at yesterday's great annual goose fair, and there was a big overflow into a neighbouring field and the adjoining roads. Over 4,000 sheep, 800 stores, 60 horses and 4,000 live geese, ducks, chickens, rabbits and ferrets changed hands. It was well into dusk when the voices of the auctioneers, hoarse to the point of extinction, were calling the final bids. Many pens of sheep averaged £5 2s. a head, double the pre-war price, but £1 less than they would have made a month ago. As all poultry were sold "on the leg," there was no price control, and geese made 30s. to £2, and ducks up to £1.

Handstuck Covers

A cover, posted in Dublin in 1669, and bearing a fine London bishop mark of arrival, and a 1676 cover, from Dublin to Kinsale, with the first Irish bishop mark, realised six guineas at a West End sale of handstuck Irish covers to-day. The printed cover of an 1840 House of Commons penny envelope, franked by Daniel O'Connell, was sold for £4 10s., and £7 15s. was paid for a collection of ten scarce provincial paid stamps, 1826-42, including Eyrecourt, Navan, Tullamore, Enniskillen, Kells, Belfast, Mullingar and Newry.

Franchise Reforms

The Municipal and Parliamentary franchise may be merged together in franchise reforms now being considered. At present people occupying unfurnished flats have municipal votes, whereas those occupying furnished apartments or living in boarding houses are deprived of their local government vote. Mr. Morrison introduced a bill on Wednesday which provides for "continuous registration" of civilians and for a separate register for Service men and women and seamen. These new voters' lists will not be printed until an election is to take place.

AN IRISHMAN'S DIARY

Samaritan

Three years ago Dr. Robert Collis presented his play "Marrowbone Lane" in Dublin, exposed the conditions under which hundreds of people in this city are living, and opened his Marrowbone Lane Samaritan Fund, which since then has done a great deal to alleviate distress in Dublin slums.

The third anniversary, I understand, will be marked by a special drive for support, and to initiate this Dr. Collis will broadcast an appeal from Radio Eireann to-morrow (Sunday) at 9.55 p.m. On November 8 his first play will be presented again, this time at the Olympia Theatre, and a special benefit night for the fund has been arranged.

One of the principal objects of this drive for funds is to get enough money to enable the committee to extend their famous Sutton home, Fairy Hill. They hope to be able to build a new wing, which will hold fifteen beds, and, if only to accomplish this object, they deserve generous help. The results achieved at this home have been remarkable, one of the most outstanding examples of the excellent work done there being the case of the Connolly triplets, from Longford. When the triplets were born they weighed four pounds between them. When they left Fairy Hill about a year later they weighed twenty pounds each.

Symphony Concerts

The most significant feature of the concert-going boom in Dublin is that the audiences for the Radio Eireann orchestral concerts at the Mansion House, during these last two years, have been composed largely of young people who, in normal times would not seek much further than the cinema for their entertainment. Yet, deprived of their full quota of cinema entertainment, these very critics decided to try a symphony concert—and came again and again.

The Mansion House, which seats about eight hundred, was clearly inadequate to the demand for seats last winter, so this season's series of concerts will be held at the Capitol Theatre, which can accommodate over two thousand. If the Radio Orchestra can fill it for the ten concerts, I think that the position of music in Dublin will be quite secure.

During the last two years the orchestra has been steadily improving; the strings and wood-winds have always been reliable, and the previously uncertain brass section showed distinctly more polish and confidence last winter. One now has the feeling that the orchestra could tackle, successfully, almost any of the great works.

"The Man in the Street"

Captain Michael Bowles, the conductor, is avowedly appealing to the "man in the street" for his audience, and the programmes for the five concerts up to the end of the year have many features to attract the uninformed listener.

The Tchaikowsky piano concerto No. 1 in B flat minor, the Beethoven fifth symphony and the sixth (the "Pastoral"), the Grieg A minor piano concerto, the Scherherazade suite of Rimsky-Korsakov and the Beethoven violin concerto, are all reliable drawing-cards. The other major works appearing on the programmes are two Brahms symphonies—the second in D, to-morrow, and the first in C, on November 20—the Cesar Franck symphony No. 2 in D minor, and the Dvorak 'cello concerto.

The laudable plan of bringing Irish composers before the public is being continued, and we have the Prelude, Scherzo and Impromptu by the conductor, Michael Bowles; the delightful suite of Ulster airs by Redmond Friel, two movements from Harty's Irish symphony, and the first performance of Arthur Duff's second suite for strings. Here is sufficient to satisfy any "man in the street."

Programmes

Captain Bowles is faced with the difficult problem of filling a hall which is more than twice the size of the Mansion House, and trying to please the uninitiated without alienating the more experienced music-lovers. For that reason he can be excused a good deal of the repetition on the programmes.

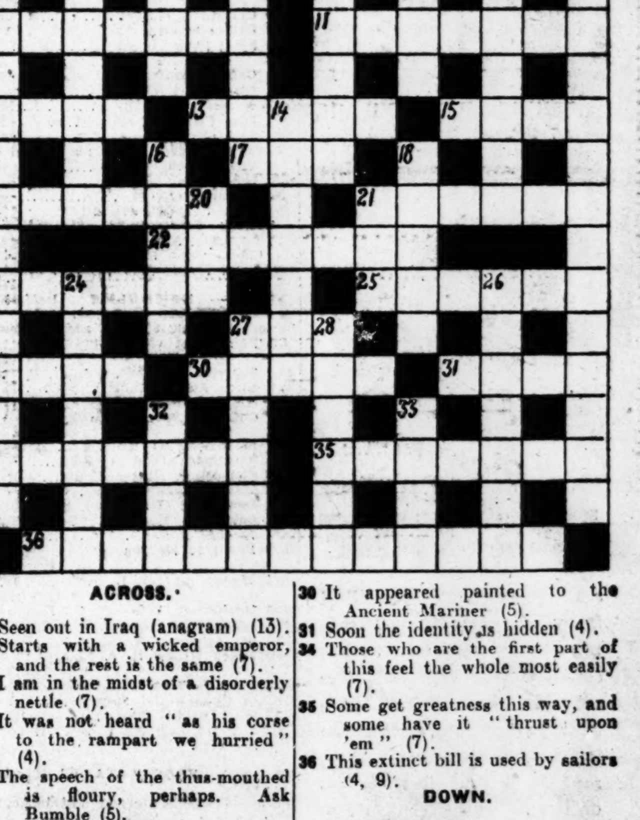

However, I feel that it is high time the Tchaikowsky piano concerto was decently interred; the Grieg concerto also might be given a rest, and it would be a pleasant change, perhaps, to have the gay, light-hearted Beethoven eighth symphony as a variant to the famous "fifth."

What immediately strikes one about these programmes is the absence of a Mozart symphony or concerto, or any work whatsoever by Haydn or Bach. Mozart appears for a fleeting moment in the third programme; but surely we could have had a symphony—preferably the "Lenz" or the exquisite No. 34 in C major. Either the G major or A major violin concertos, too, would have the strongest appeal, while the plain man could never object to Haydn's "Surprise" and "Clock" symphonies or some of the Bach suites.

Mill Boy Fancied

A VERY entertaining day's racing is promised at the Curragh, where the October Handicap will bring out several of those that contested the Irish Cambridgeshire a fortnight ago. Dunseverick and Mill Boy were second and third respectively in that race and meet again on the same terms. It is a very open affair, but Mill Boy is taken to reverse the placings with Dunseverick, as he appeared to be staying on the better in the Cambridgeshire.

Annetta is a nice sort of filly, and should win the Probationers' Stakes, in which most danger may come from Budore and Colomb's Kingdom. Selections:—

Osborne Handicap—Knee High.
Scurry Handicap—Ins an Mala.
Probationers' Stakes—Annetta.
October Handicap—Mill Boy.
Harehill Plate—Ruby Port.
Rathbride Plate—Calvados.
Ruanbeg Handicap—Great Sacrifice

Dorman Long to Redeem 5 p.c. Debenture Stock

ANOTHER important Debenture redemption proposal was announced yesterday, the company being Dorman Long, the Middlesbrough iron and steel combination. The company has given the holders of its £3,031,560 of 5 p.c. Debenture Stock notice of its intention to redeem the whole amount on January 17 next at 105 p.c., plus interest to that date. The Stock was last dealt in at 103½.

In order to finance the redemption, it is proposed to offer 2,094,334 new Ordinary shares of £1 each to the holders of the Preferred Ordinary or Ordinary shares on the register on October 25 at the price of 27/- per share in the proportion of one new Ordinary share for each share held. The balance of repayment will be provided out of the company's cash resources.

The offer to the shareholders, with rights of renunciation, will be made on or after November 3. The new Ordinary shares will rank for dividend in respect of the current financial year, but not in respect of the year which ended on September 30.

The old Ordinary shares rose 1/3 yesterday to 32/-, while the Preferred Ordinary rose 1/3 to 52/6. For the year to September 30, 1942, the Ordinary received 8 p.c. and the Preferred Ordinary 16 p.c. The accounts for the past year have not yet been issued. Last year's accounts were out in March this year.

The 10/- shares of Electric and Musical Industries, Ltd., were a strong feature yesterday, touching 27/- and closing at 26/6. This followed the announcement that the dividend of 6 p.c. is to be increased to 8 p.c. by a cash bonus of 2 p.c. Profits have recovered to £174,357, the best since 1937, when the total was £293,178, and 10 p.c. was paid.

In the intervening period the company has been through difficult times, sustaining a loss of £13,968 in 1939. For that, and the following year, no dividend was paid. Then came a recovery, which has continued each year with dividends of 6 p.c. It is evident from the low yield of £2 19/10 p.c. offered by the shares on the basis of the 8 p.c. distribution that the post-war prospects of the company are rated very high.

UNITED STEEL

Profits of United Steel Companies for the year to June 30 last, after providing for E.P.T., depreciation and Debenture interest, were £2,026,579 (against £1,916,132 previously). From this income tax reserve secures £1,290,000 (against £1,154,000). As already announced, Ordinary dividend is 8 p.c. for the year. The dividend has been the same every year since and including 1939.

The company is a most important company, with many subsidiaries owning collieries, coking plants, iron ore mines and blast furnaces. Its principal branches fall into three geographical groups in Cumberland, Sheffield and Lincolnshire. In Cumberland the St. Helen's Colliery Company has been acquired, which will enable work to be conducted over the whole of the large field of coal lying under the sea for a distance of 11½ miles from Whitehaven to Maryport.

Timothy Whites and Taylors, Ltd., which yesterday announced the maintenance of its interim dividend at 7½ p.c., is one of the most prosperous multiple shop companies in Britain. Its principal problems throughout the war years has been securing supplies, but, despite this, profits have risen steadily, although the amount available has been curtailed by taxation. Each year since 1936 however, the dividend has been maintained at 30 p.c.

The capital is somewhat highly-geared. It totals £2,161,793, of which £1,676,000 is in 7½ p.c. Cum. Pref. shares, and only £485,793 in 5/- Ord. shares. These are valued in the market at about 34/-, at which they offer a yield of £4 8/3 p.c.

Gold Shares Good

London Stock Markets were firm yesterday, but business was quiet. Chief interest was in Kaffirs. In the O.F.S. group, Western Holdings rose 1/6 to 41/6, Lydenburg 1/3 to 50/-, and W.R.I.T. 3d. to 37/-. Far Western Rand issues were also supported, Blyvoor improving 1/3 to 86/3, Venterspost 1/10½ to 35/-, and Libanon 6d. to 22/-.

Rhodesian Coppers were bought, Nchanga gaining 3/1½ to 43/9, Rho. Anglo 1/3 to 22/-, and Rhokana ⅛ to 7⅝. Diamonds weakened.

British Rails developed a stronger tendency. In Oils, Ultramar gained 1/3 at 62/9.

Dorman Long were a good feature in Iron and Steel, rising 6d. to 31/3 on dividend expectations. Guinness were 6d. better at 124/3.

Limerick Loan Higher Again

MARKETS finished the week under fairly active conditions on the Dublin Stock Exchange yesterday. Industrials for the most part were in request, and the tendency was firmer. Changes in Home Rails made a mixed showing.

Limerick 3½ p.c. Loan was still in the limelight, and further support put the price up to 1½ premium. Government Funds held steady, and 3½ p.c. War Loan rose to 104⅞.

Banks encountered selling pressure, and Bank of Ireland relapsed 30/- to 335½, while Hibernians eased to 51/3, and Nationals to 49/-.

Guinness units, on further buying, made headway to 124/-, while Grand Canal issues held steady. In Rails, Great Northern Pref. eased to 40¼, but the Gtd. improved to 56½. Great Southern Ord. fell a point to 19½, and the Gtd. a like amount to 43, but the Deb. hardened to 70.

W. Lenihan Beaten

W. Lenihan met his second senior defeat at the hands of his previous conqueror, G. Morahan, at the Stadium last night, but the decision in the latter's favour appeared rather difficult to justify. Morahan did much of the attacking, but Lenihan's good anticipation, quick counter, and relentless follow-up earned him many points; his blows were more telling, and he had his opponent rather shaken at several stages, without himself seeming in severe straits at any time. Lenihan appeared to be working well within his strength, while Morahan obviously was tiring towards the finish, though there is no denying his ability to take punishment.

There was plenty of fire in the four rounds of the cruiser-weight contest, in which G. Colman reversed last week's Curragh decision by knocking out G. Swaine. The winner's left hook did good work, and a hard left to the point stretched Swaine on the canvas for the count midway through the fourth round.

Juvenile—A. Cullen (North City) beat T. Ryan (St. Vincent's) on points; T. Dennis (St. Vincent's) beat J. Campbell (North City) on points.

Fly—J. Power (Avona) beat F. McGrane (North City) on points.

Feather—J. Gaffney (Sandymount) beat T. Christy (North City) on points; Cpl. Dowdall (Army) beat W. Gifford (Arbour Hill) on points; Pte. Davis (Arbour Hill) beat E. Cannon (North City) on points.

Bantam—G. Morahan (North City) beat W. Lenihan (Arbour Hill) on points.

Light—R. Walsh (North City) beat P. Tyrrell (C.B.S.I.) on points.

Welter—T. Kavanagh (C.B.S.I.) beat T. Murphy (North City) on points.

Cruiser—G. Colman (North City) k.o. G. Swaine (Griffith) in fourth round.

Unemployment in the Bacon Trade

The serious position of the bacon trade, and the consequent slump in employment, were matters under review by the Munster Bacon Council of the Irish Transport Workers' Union, which met in Limerick yesterday (Friday). Delegates were present from Limerick, Waterford, Cork and Tralee. Mr. John Conroy, of the head office, Dublin, presided. Formerly five thousand workers earned a livelihood in the South, but to-day that number has been reduced considerably, and those at work are being employed on a day-to-day basis.

£2,000 for Grattan Relics

Almost £2,000 was cleared by the three-day auction sale at Tennehinch, from home of Henry Grattan, Enniskerry, which ended yesterday. The remainder of the furniture and outdoor effects were disposed of, and the day's takings amounted to about £500.

The highest price of the day was £40 for a bedroom suite, and other principal prices were:—Maple suite, £30; carpenter's bench, £11 10/-; tub trap, £10; satin walnut wardrobe, £8; garden vases, £7.

The sale was conducted by Messrs. Allen and Townsend, St. Stephen's Green.

TABLE TENNIS EXHIBITION.

With a view to stimulating interest in table tennis among the members of the newly-formed Army club, four of the leading players, Messrs. Hanrahan, Thuillier, Morris and Huet, gave a fine exhibition at the Soldiers' Club, O'Connell street, Dublin, last night, demonstrating all the strokes. The exhibition was organised by Mr. E. Smith. Mr. N. M. Kemp, president, represented the Table Tennis Association. Colonel Houlihan, Major Corrigan, Captain Moylett, and Father McLoughlin were among those present.

Cutting and Gardening Decorations

(By G. O. Sherrard)

THE last flowers to brighten the garden before winter sets in are the Michaelmas Daisies or Perennial Asters. This large group of plants is of the highest value both for cutting and garden decoration. The present century has witnessed a great improvement in the flower in size, colour and form at the hands of the plant breeders, and now a large number of excellent varieties are available in shades of mauve, pink, dark red and white. The first perennial Aster to flower is A. Acris, which starts to bloom in July, and continues till mid-September. It is a good plant for massing, as it forms a dense cloud of pale blue flower. It is of little value for cutting. It needs careful staking, but, unlike most of the group, does not require frequent division. A. Acris grows about 2ft. high, and has produced few varieties; there is, however, a dwarf form, about 1ft. high, and a white variety. Aster Thomsoni opens nearly as early as A. Acris, and continues in flower till frost comes. It is an excellent little border plant, about 1ft. high, with fairly large mauve flowers.

BORDER PLANTS

The great herbaceous border at Castle Forbes is edged with this variety, and it fulfils the rôle of edging plant remarkably well on account of its long-flowering period. Early in September the varieties derived from Aster Amellus begin to flower, and continue to mid-October. These are handsome border plants, and have the largest flowers of any Michaelmas daisies. Their wiry stems make them excellent for cutting, and several of the varieties can do without stakes. King George is the best-known Amellus Aster, and has the largest flowers of deep violet blue colouring. Imperator is another fine blue variety, and Sonia is the best pink. The Amellus varieties do best when left undisturbed, but need good feeding; manure should be dug in before planting and an annual mulch given. Towards the end of September all the late-flowered types come into flower, the heath-like Ericoides varieties, with masses of tiny flowers, much appreciated by bees; the Corofolius kinds, such as "Silver Spray," taller than the Ericoides, but, like them, carrying numerous sprays of minute flowers, and the tall, large-flowered Novi-belgii kinds. The last section contains more varieties than any other division of Michaelmas daisies; to it belong such well-known kinds as Climax, Empress of Colwall and October Dawn. It is in this section that the plant breeder has been most successful in enlarging the range of colours of the plant. In the variety, Ethel Ballard, one gets a soft pink; Dazzler is rose red, and Red Rover dark red.

DWARFS

A number of very useful dwarf kinds were added to this section about 15 years ago, such as Nancy and Victor; these make hummocky little plants about 8 ins. high, but with quite large flowers. The secret of growing the late flowered Michaelmas Daisies well is to divide them frequently, every year if possible, planting quite small pieces from the outside of the clump in well-manured soil. In years when division is not possible the shoots should be thinned out when young. Division is usually carried out in March, but is equally possible in autumn, when flowering is finished. They are plants which relish a deep moisture-holding loam of rather heavy consistency that has been well enriched with manure. They cannot tolerate dry conditions at the root, and are, therefore, difficult to grow in light or shallow soils, where they almost invariably develop mildew. It is said that in America the wild types are found in swampy ground, which would account for the failure of the garden varieties under dry conditions. In addition to the border plantings, some plants should always be put in a reserve bed for cutting.

BALLYVORISHEEN, BESIDE MALLOW, CO. CORK.

Highly important and exceptionally attractive Sale of a magnificent fattening, finishing and dairying Farm of 165 acres of deep, rich, limestone land of the very best quality, with barns, stalls, sheds, etc. A safe, sound and tempting investment.

D. B. SULLIVAN and CO., have been instructed by the owner, Mrs. E. R. Sullivan, to offer for Sale by Private Treaty her valuable interest and goodwill in the above grand Farm, containing 165 acres or thereabouts, held at the extremely low revised annuity of £53 4s. 8d., P.L.V. £154 15s. 0d.

These lands are well known to be of the very primest quality, noted for their fattening, finishing, great bone-giving qualities, as well as for the abundance of its crops, and universally acknowledged to be one of the most productive cattle and sheep pastures in the South.

This farm is divided into conveniently-sized, level easily-worked fields, with gates and piers to each, with well-kept hedges, intersected by the main roads to Fermoy and Mitchelstown, one mile from Mallow; admirably fenced, watered and sheltered; always carefully farmed, and situated in midst of Duhallow hunting country.

Large, 4 section hay barn, large sheds and stables, caretaker's house and 4-roomed cottage, in perfect repair; fruit, flower and vegetable gardens.

The Auctioneers recommend intending purchasers to personally inspect the property in order to properly appreciate its exceptional value.

This is undoubtedly one of the most desirable properties offered for sale for many years, without one perch of waste, and is a safe, sound and tempting investment.

SALE TUESDAY, 26th OCTOBER, NOURSDALE, MILLTOWN.

RESIDENCE AND ABOUT 3 ACRES
(BY INSTRUCTIONS OF GEORGE W. SHANNON, ESQ.).

A RESIDENCE, so happily conceived and designed as to harmonise with, and perhaps enhance, the unusual natural charm of its surroundings. Exquisite views of the Dublin hills, ample but easily kept pleasure grounds, and serene quiet, combine with close proximity to Milltown Railway Station and main tram and 'bus routes, and a not unreasonable walking distance from the city itself.
The House is non-basement and is in first-class order. Its accommodation consists of a lounge, a drawingroom and a diningroom, three lovely apartments, with maple floors and window arrangement of the most attractive kind. The staircase, quaintly designed and lighted by a leaded window, leads to the bedroom floor, on which there are four bedrooms (in two of which there are h. & c. basins), dressingroom, bathroom, maid's room, the latter approached by a separate staircase. On the hall floor there are tiled cloakroom with basin and w.c., kitchen with Ideal boiler, three pantries, laundry, etc. Electric light and plugs throughout.
The Garage is large enough to accommodate 2 cars. There is a picturesque Gate Lodge, containing sittingroom, two bedrooms and kitchen, and the approach to the residence is by a hedge-bound, tree-shaded avenue.
The Grounds include large garden with tomato house and greenhouse, lawn tennis court and pleasure grounds. Exclusive of the grounds already mentioned there is a plot, which has been let at £9 a year, the benefit of which a purchaser will receive. The Aga cooker and some minor items will not be included in the Sale.
Noursdale is held for 200 years from 1st May, 1869, subject to the annual rent of £43 18s. 4d. P.L.V., £67 10s. 0d. Seen by appointment.
JOYNT & CRAWFORD, Solicitors, Foster Place.

WOODBROOK, CARRICK-ON-SHANNON.

HIGHLY-INTERESTING RESIDENCE AND DEMESNE.

This attractive Property is held in Fee-simple, subject to the revised annuity of £53 7s. 8d., and consists of non-basement Residence and 203 acres 1 rood 15 perches, or thereabouts. It is situated on the main 'bus road Dublin to Sligo, in a sporting neighbourhood noted for its fishing and shooting facilities, and also for its convenience to hunting and golf. The Lands are of prime quality, and the place is associated with the breeding of winners of Grand National, Ascot Gold Cup and Vase, Conyngham Cup, and other important races.
The Residence which has been the home of the Kirkwood family for generations, enjoys a charming situation, with views of the River Shannon, and contains lounge hall, three sittingrooms, six bedrooms, two bathrooms, servants' hall and bedroom, kitchen with A.B. cooker, dairy, etc. There are extensive offices, including stabling, hay shed, barn, groom's house, etc. Two good Cottages are on the estate. Possession to purchaser.
DERMOT MacDERMOT & CO., Solicitors, Boyle, Co. Roscommon.

35 GREENFIELD ROAD, MOUNT MERRION.

Attractively-situated, semi-detached, non-basement House, double-fronted, with bay window and covered verandah. Contains two reception rooms (one having French windows to garden), four family bedrooms, bathroom, separate w.c.; has unusually large garden and garage. Held under long lease subject to £10 per annum. P.L.V., £26 10s. 0d., plus 10s. for garden. Vacant Possession. Seen by appointment with Auctioneers.

£1,850 YEARLY
(approx.) out of
MODERN BLOCK OF FLATS, known as NO. 25
UPR. PEMBROKE ST., DUBLIN.

THE MOST MODERN BLOCK OF RESIDENTIAL FLATS IN IRELAND, COMPARABLE WITH THE BEST OF SIMILAR FLATS IN LONDON, NEW YORK AND CONTINENTAL CENTRES. BUILT IN RECENT YEARS (1941), REGARDLESS OF EXPENSE, THE 20 SELF-CONTAINED FLATS INCORPORATED IN THE BUILDING (five-storey) EMBODY ALL THE ADVANTAGES WHICH ADVANCED MODERN AND SCIENTIFIC THOUGHT CAN CONTRIVE, INCLUDING CENTRAL HEATING THROUGHOUT (Neo-Classic Radiators), AUTOMATIC ELECTRIC LIFT IN CENTRAL HALL, PROVIDING EASY ACCESS TO EACH FLAT, AND HAND-SERVICE LIFT FOR DELIVERY OF PARCELS, ETC.; HOUSE TELEPHONE SERVICE INSTALLED; BUILT-IN WARDROBES; LAUNDRY INSTALLED IN BASEMENT FOR TENANTS' USE; ALSO LARGE STORE ROOMS FOR TRUNKS, BICYCLES, ETC.

The floors of livingrooms, bedrooms and private halls are of ⅞" strip oak, and of kitchens, bathrooms pitch pine, and there are two exits from each Flat. Air-raid shelter in the basement. The walls and ceilings of the bathrooms and kitchens are finished in oil colours and the other rooms in oil-bound colour. Range hoods, for the elimination of cooking odours, have been fitted in the kitchens, which are also fitted with cupboards and larders. Three garages at rear. Held separately.

In view of the convenient position and general character, the Flats are always in ready demand, and an assured and steady income can always be counted upon. Financial accommodation is available to approved parties.

THE AUCTIONEERS, AFTER PERSONAL INSPECTION, CAN CONFIDENTLY RECOMMEND THE PROPERTY AS THE MOST DESIRABLE INVESTMENT WHICH HAS COME ON THE MARKET FOR SOME YEARS.

Held direct from Lord Pembroke under Lease newly granted, for 150 years at £40 per an. P.L.V., £419 (2/3rds. remission rates until April, 1947).
